Out of Army,
Fraivillig
Opens Office

Captain Leonard M. Fraivillig, just back from service in England, Africa, Italy and France, has lost little orientation time before determining his future course in civil life. Honorably discharged on January 13, the energetic engineer today announced that he has established himself in business under the firm name of Leonard M. Fraivillig Company, with offices in the Bethlehem Trust Building. All types of engineering, survey and business management will be within the scope of the company.

Captain Fraivillig, a Lehigh graduate, was associated with the city's engineering department for a period of fifteen years before entering the Army. During this time he assisted in the development of the Wild Creek Water Project and since his return has been associated with City Engineer R. L. Fox in the Penn Forest water extension program.
