VO-TECH

"THE NEXT GENERATION"

BY JANET WORSLEY

Donald Foellner, director of the Bethlehem Area Vocational-Technical School, is proud of his bathrooms.

They're brightly lit, there's no graffiti, and no dim fog of second-hand smoke. Any writing on the walls is painted over by vo-tech students, the same students who plant flowers outside the entrance, run the campus bakery and even build classrooms as part of their contribution to the school.

To Mr. Foellner, the bathrooms are evidence of something he has known all along: Vo-tech, which has long had an aura of auto shops, leather jackets and alternative education, is not what most people expect.

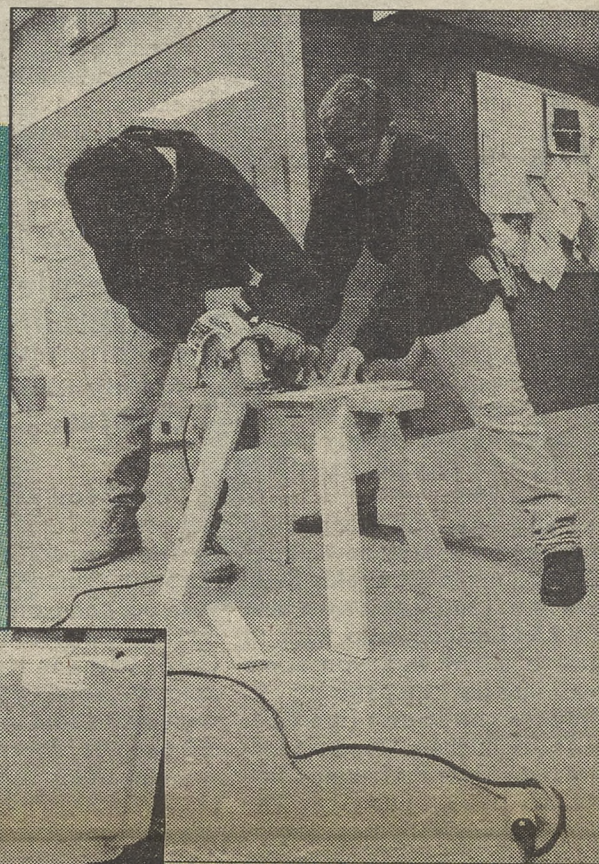

In an age where it seems every entry-level position requires a college diploma, vo-tech, which has traditionally been geared for students who didn't plan on higher education, appears archaic.

Once, Mr. Foellner said, parents wanted their children to go to college so that they could do better in life than the previous generation. But the promise of college and the American dream are no longer what they once were.

"By the year 2000, only 20 percent of the jobs will need a baccalaureate degree," Mr. Foellner said, though high schools still educate with college in mind.

"It's the American dream gone amok," he said, "There's a mismatch there."

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, since the 1950s, 20 percent of the jobs out there have been labeled professional positions. However, skilled positions — the kind that require technical training — are expected to reach 65 percent in the year 2000.

Bethlehem's new team

Gerald Scharf has been ill this week. Filling in for him is Dave McCollum, general manager for the Easton Publishing Company, which publishes The Bethlehem Star.

A h ... the newspaper business. One of the few businesses in the world where the employees work furiously each day to create a product that will meet the needs and expectations of every potential reader. Then, as soon as the printing press begins to spit out copies of the newspaper, the process begins all over again for the next day's edition. We literally create a totally new product each day, 365 days a year.

So why, you might ask, am I talking about a daily newspaper in this column in the weekly Bethlehem Star. I suppose it's the best intro I could come up with to begin to share with you some insight into our company.

In case you hadn't figured it out, The Bethlehem Star is a product of the Easton Publishing Company, which also publishes The Express-Times daily newspaper,

The Phillipsburg Free Press weekly and The Entertainer (a "total market coverage" weekly in eastern Northampton County and Warren County, N.J.). Until a few weeks ago we also published the Hackettstown, N.J., Star Gazette and The Forum, another weekly in New Jersey. The two weeklies are now part of another Media News' group.

Our goal is to serve you, the Bethlehem community, with the newspapers you deserve.

For several years, the Easton Publishing Company was owned by The Thomson Corp., based in Toronto, Canada. In June of this year, our company was purchased by Dean Singleton's Media News Corp., based in Houston. So we are now proud to say that we are once again able to proclaim ourselves to be "American."

Some of Mr. Singleton's newspaper holdings include The Denver Post and The Houston Post, along with several other dailies and weeklies from New Jersey to California. Mr. Singleton seems to have a special fondness for New Jersey, since that is where he was born and raised. Oh yes, he also owns a daily in Fairbanks, Alaska, a destination I have been threatened to be sent to if we fail to meet our sales plan. (I should never have let them know that I cannot stand cold weather).

In less than a year, The Bethlehem Star has become an integral part of our company. With more than 40,000 readers like you each week, we now can offer our advertisers the opportunity to combine The Star with The Express-Times to reach 60,000 Bethlehem readers with a single ad. We also are in the process of developing a news gathering organization in Bethlehem to combine the talents of our reporters, photographers and editors of our daily and weekly operations, under the direction of Jerry Scharf.

Our goal is to serve you, the Bethlehem community, with the newspapers you deserve. Let us know how we're doing. We look forward to hearing from you.

Treat yourself to autumn in N.Y.C.

Well, the summer is over ... sort of. But don't let that get you down because I have a sure-fire plan that will brighten your spirits and make you glad the cool weather is back (at least for one afternoon.) Autumn is the perfect time to hit the road for a mini-adventure, and taking a day off in the middle of the week is always fun.

Now for the plan. Spend a Wednesday in New York City. Oh, please ... stop your whining. I know about the bad press the city gets. The dirt, homeless, traffic, crime, the smell — did I leave anything out? All of those things are there, but I'm going to show you how to eliminate all the muss and fuss of traveling to the city, and when you arrive, your excitement will replace any trepidation you might have felt.

Let's start with what you will need for your trip. The most important ingredient for the day is people you really enjoy being with.

No complainers need apply. A few other things are money, a car that runs, a copy of this column and good walking shoes.

All ready? Great! Leave no later than 7:30 a.m. You should arrive in N.Y.C. approximately 9:30 a.m. After parking your car in Port Authority (No, nobody is going to hurt it.) you will walk up to 47th and Broadway to the half price ticket kiosk that is smack dab in the middle of the street.

That's right, you are going to see a Broadway show. You will know you are at the right place because a great deal of people will be there already. Don't let this bother you. There are plenty of tickets for everyone.

Just get in line and send one of your party to the front of the kiosk where a list of available tickets is posted. This is one of the few decisions you will have to make today, but it is an important one. Most everything on Broadway is worth seeing, but if this is your first time, play it safe and choose a long-running smash musical hit.

Discover the night world of "Cats"; experience the heart-

A. Davenport Jordan, a lifelong resident of Fountain Hill, is the editor-in-chief of Conrail's financial newsletter wrenching story of "Miss Saigon"; marvel at the special effects of "Tommy" or have some heart as you sing along with those "Damn Yankees." Any of these will do, as well as many other favorites.

After that it's time to get some lunch. Although there are hundreds of great restaurants in the city, today's choice will be made simple. Walk up to 57th Street and turn right. If you feel young, funky and with it, go no farther than the Hard Rock Cafe. The music is everywhere and the memorabilia is awesome. (What do you mean it's just for kids? Didn't they have music when you were a kid? Their mottoes are "Save the Planet" and "Love All Serve All" sounds pretty mature to me.)

The most important ingredient for the day is people you really enjoy being with.

If this is not what you are in the mood for, not to worry. Just keep walking for a few blocks on 57th and you will run right into Planet Hollywood. This is also a fun place. The ambiance is a little more nostalgic, and the entertainment comes on large screens that show clever clips of old and new movies that everybody loves.

They also have their share of stuff to look at, but it all relates to films instead of music. In either place the food is excellent and the prices are reasonable. They both open at 11:00 a.m., and the line forms outside about 10:30 a.m., with the Planet's line usually being longer. (Also, you will have a better chance of spotting a celebrity at Planet Hollywood, because they are always running promotions there.)

After lunch, it's time to walk it off. Head on down to Fifth Avenue and start back in the direction of the theater, window shopping as you go. Oh, and just in case you are noticing that a lot of the people you pass of the street look almost perfect, and you feel sort of dumpy in your sneakers and comfortable clothes, forget about it! New York hires actors to walk up and down Fifth Avenue in designer clothes just to make tourists feel bad. What else could explain people in suits without wrinkles at 1:30 p.m. on a work day? The actors work for one hour and then change clothes. (It took me years to figure that out.)

Well, now you are at the theater. Most shows start at 2 p.m. and end around 4:15 p.m. Here's a tip. When your show lets out, go directly to Port Authority. There's a great bakery on the first level. Pick up some goodies, get back in your car (See, I told you it would be there.) and get out of the city immediately. If you can make it, the Lincoln Tunnel by 5:45 p.m., you will be cruising back into town about 7:00 p.m.

Did you have a good time? I hope so. Now that you know your way around, you can go back again and discover more of the magic that N.Y.C. has to offer. And, if you remember, let me know about your adventure. I'm sure you'll have a story or two to tell.

Manny Sossiadis

By CHRISTOPHER JUDD

Emmanuel "Manny" Sossiadis, 50, owns Manny's Auto Repair on Steffen Boulevard. Born in Athens, Greece, he came to the U.S. in 1968 looking for a better life. He opened his first shop a year later.

What brought you to Bethlehem?

I had some relatives here when I got married. My wife was born here in Bethlehem. My family is back in Athens.

You came to America to marry the woman you love?

No, I was already here when I met her. I came here for opportunity. And it worked out.

Why did you chose the automotive business?

I didn't want to go to school. My mom said I either had to go to school or learn a trade. So, here we go.

When did you open your doors?

I've had the business since 1969, when I was here one year. The first garage was at New and Broad streets. Then we moved to Center and Broad. The third was at Eighth Avenue and West Broad Street. The fourth was at Easton Avenue and Elizabeth Avenue. This is the last one. I still own the properties for investments.

What was the dirtiest oil you had to change?

I saw one that hadn't been changed in 25,000 miles. It took us an 1 1/2 hours to change the oil. We drained it and then we drained it again. It came out like ... molasses. It was worse than tar.

Do most people take care of their cars?

Yeah, most people. That's because cars have become more expensive. You have to take care of it. The better you take care of it, the better it is; like anything else. It depends on the economy. When the economy is healthy, they'll spend more on their cars.

Manny Sossiadis came to America for opportunity and found it as an auto mechanic

There's a photograph of you and Don Ritter hanging in your waiting area. Were you a friend of the former congressman?

Yes, we are good friends. When he was running for Congress, I worked for him.

Who do you like in the race for governor?

I haven't decided. I'll wait until the last minute. I will vote, though; definitely.

What do you think of Just Born's plans to build a visitors

How was business during last winter's storms?

Business was 25 percent higher. I mean, business has increased every year here, but last year especially. The people who didn't take of their cars in the summer — they got hurt. Cars don't like the cold, too.

Can you spot the bad work of a previous mechanic?

You see work that hasn't been done properly. With brakes, you notice as soon as you pull the center for its candy plant down the road from here?

Beautiful. Just Born are good people for the area. They generate money for the economy. A lot of people work there. You can see what they've done already.

wheel. They may have forgot to put the springs on. Or in the engine compartment, if a car was in for a tune up, you may see that half of the things were not checked.

Do most people think you're aiming to rip them off?

They're half and half. Every honest mechanic has a hard time. You watch the way a customer walks in and you can see whether they trust you. You have to make them trust you.

How?

I talk to them. Any bad parts that I take out, I line them up right next to the car so they can see them. Most of the people who come here, they tell their friends. That's how I get most of my business.

What's the strangest repair job you've faced?

Cars can always be strange. The engine isn't working, so the person brings it in, and then it's working. Or, you start a car up and drive it around and ten minutes later the battery is dead. You never know.

Do you believe in UFO's?

No. I believe in things that are already here on Earth.

birds on the move

BY ARLENE KOCH

Everybody seems to be going somewhere

This is an article about birds - big birds and little birds.

Sometimes I find it amazing that I'm so involved with them. If anyone had told me back in my well-dressed and well-coiffed college days that I'd be spending the bulk of my future dressed like Jane Goodall, I would've told them they were nuts. But that's what I do.

To a birder like me, September and October are magical months. Not only are there large numbers and varieties of raptors and other birds migrating along the ridge tops, but there are also the other smaller migrating species that plop down in your yard in the morning to feed. The fall migration hits you with a double whammy. You're torn between walking through fields and looking down into bushes and fence rows to find that elusive sparrow you've never seen or climbing the mountain and staring straight up into the sky at the powerful wings of the passing hawks.

First, some words about big birds. October is a fantastic time to spend a few hours or a whole day on one of the rock outcroppings along the Kittatinny Ridge. The views are incredible, and migrants are passing by at a steady stream. Some of the species you could expect to see at a hawk lookout on a nice October day are sharp-shinned, Cooper's, red-shouldered, and red-tailed hawks, ospreys, kestrels (sparrow hawks), possibly a merlin (pigeon hawk), and if you're really lucky a peregrine (duck hawk) or a northern goshawk. Northern harriers often glide by on slightly upturned wings. And, without anything being said, everyone on the rocks is constantly scanning the far horizon looking for the BIG BIRD, the one with steady, flat out wings that will make all the rest look puny.

Vee's of Canada and snow geese pass by, giving away their presence by the constant honking. Common and occasionally red-throated loons pass over, sometimes in small flocks but more often singly or in pairs. When they catch a thermal they may circle around overhead for awhile, giving their "On Golden Pond" call. If listening to that sound doesn't mentally transport you to far away places, then nothing will.

Various species of waterfowl and groups of great blue herons can also be seen. There's a restlessness to the skies right now. Everything seems to be going somewhere.

And now, some words about small birds. While you're sitting on the sometimes-uncomfortable rocks watching for hawks, back home somewhere other migrants are making their presence known. The best time to see these birds is the first few hours of the morning, when activity is at its height. These nocturnal migrants put down at daybreak to refuel and rest, sometimes for a few hours and sometimes for a few days.

Sparrows - those little brown birds that always get a bum rap - are migrating at full tilt right now. Most nonbirders don't know (or care) that there are many varieties of sparrows, some of which are strikingly attractive. They don't all look like nondescript creatures with wings that just recently emerged from a dust bin.

My personal favorite is the white-crowned sparrow, which can be found now at just about any place you'd normally search for sparrows. Even my husband David and my son Jim, both basically nonbirders, find this bird attractive. It's about 7 inches tall, has a clear gray chest and belly, and its head is covered with stand-out black and white stripes that grab your attention. It seems to have an upright stance that other sparrows don't, but this is possibly just a visual deception.

Another sparrow that's also very striking and usually only seen in our area during fall migration is the Lincoln's. In order to appreciate this bird, you have to get up close and personal. It's smaller than the common house sparrow and usually very secretive, preferring overgrown wet areas. During migration, though, it can pop up just about anywhere that there's sufficient cover.

The Lincoln's sparrow responds readily to "spsshing" or clicking your tongue, and raises its head feathers up like a small crest when agitated. It seems to suddenly appear out of nowhere at the top of a foxtail or blade of grass. What sets this sparrow aside from the others is the orangish/buffy color wash filled with fine streaking that it has on its chest and around its face. The bird has a detailed appearance, almost as if an artist spent hours getting the streaks just right. It's just another little marvel of nature out there waiting to be found.

Radiology Associates Supports

National Breast Cancer Awareness Month

A mammogram is the single best method of detecting breast cancer. Breast tumors can be detected by this method up to two years before your doctor or health care provider can feel them. The American Cancer Society recommends:

- 1) Age 35-39— Obtain a baseline mammogram which can be used later for comparison
- 2) Age 40 to 49—Have a mammogram every one to two years as your doctor directs.
- 3) Age 50 and over — Have a mammogram every year.

You can develop breast cancer at any age, but your risk increases as you grow older. You are twice as likely to develop the disease at age 70 as at 50. So, the older you are, the more vital it becomes to follow these guidelines.

- * Every woman is at risk for breast cancer.
- * Every woman needs to be diligent about breast health, especially as she grows older.
- * Get regular mammograms and clinical breast exams.
- * Perform breast self-exam once a month, starting at age 20.

Histories and legends

in days gone by

BY CHARLES G. HAFNER

Teens' rite of passage

As people travel north on Eighth Avenue past Martin Tower, few realize they are traveling over a former drivers' test course on which many local citizens took their driving tests to qualify for their first operators' licenses, an event so significant for the neophyte auto operator it was virtually a rite of passage on the way to adulthood. Thus, those with a penchant for rhyme can with some basis in fact note that Martin Tower stands at a "rite site."

Prior to 1950 and long before the Spur Route (378) was built, the drivers' test site was located just north of the present location of the overpass over the Spur Route. A small, one-room white building with green trim stood about where the entrance and sign of Specialty Brands' Durkee plant is now located. This facility was used exclusively for driver tests. It contained a desk and several chairs. Here the troopers conducting the test received the applicant and completed the necessary paperwork.

Then the trooper with clipboard in hand accompanied the prospective driver to the car, taking his place beside the driver. For many applicants this was a time of considerable anxiety and trepidation, as testing times usually are. Having a uniformed police officer watching a neophyte's every move increased the tension in the very large majority of the cases regardless of the officer's impartiality. Few applicants appreciated how much of a routine this had become for the officer. The difference between approval and failure was usually extremely important for the applicant. It may have been routine for the officer, but it was critically important for the driver.

The neophyte started the car and proceeded north on Eighth Avenue. Halfway up the hill the driver was told to come to a stop, leave the motor running, then start forward again. Prior to automatic transmissions, resuming progress on a hill could be difficult. Many considered this the most difficult part of the test. For a new driver, stalling here was disastrous.

Then it was up the hill and on to a stop sign at Eaton Avenue. Again it was stop, start and then on across Eaton Avenue. On Eighth Avenue north of Eaton there were telephone poles standing along both sides of the street. (At that time there were no sidewalks, just field and forest.) The applicant had to turn around within the area bounded by the poles.

After turning the car around as required, the operator of the vehicle proceeded south, again stopping at a stop sign located at Eaton Avenue. Each time he stopped, he of course had to look both ways to make sure there was no approaching traffic. Then it was on to the point of origin at the white and green shed.

When the applicant originally received his learner's permit, he also received a book with instructions on basic regulations and safe practices related to driving. It was a long list of questions with answers. Occasionally in study halls in school, students could be seen studying for their driver tests. Schools then did not offer driving courses, and professional driving courses were rare.

As the student approached the white and green shed, the officer instructed him to pull over and park. The trooper would then give the oral portion of the test, consisting of questions from the instruction book the applicant had studied. However, there was a fireplug located near this point, and quite often novice drivers would refuse to park there, saying, "Oh no, I won't park near a fireplug," implying it was a trick. The officer had to assure the skeptic it was no trick and quite permissible, that it was the time and place for the driver to take the oral portion of the test. Today there is a red pipe with connections for two hoses where the fire plug had been located.

If the applicant passed the test, the trooper stamped and signed his application. The Department of Transportation in Harrisburg was notified, and shortly thereafter the new driver had his license. The new license was usually conspicuously displayed in the driver's wallet. It was a source of pride, an early symbol of admission to a preferred group of especially qualified teenagers or young adults, something representing successful completion of one of the common rites of passage from teenager to young adult.

Today many students learn to drive in formal programs administered by local high schools or by private training programs. However, I'm quite certain many of the same feelings of anxiety, the qualms and trepidation, followed finally by the pride of success and accomplishment, are still there.

Vo-tech changes with the times

No one knows that reality better than Frank Congilio Jr., a full-time adult student who returned to vo-tech for training after being laid off from three different jobs.

His high school education didn't prepare him for the work force of today, he said. "I've never ever sat in front of a computer in my life until I got here," he said.

Now, with that computer, Mr. Congilio is programming machines to grind tools to exact specifications, more easily and with less error than one could do by hand.

"This is all high-tech stuff, there are less mistakes," he said, "There aren't a lot of manual machines in shops anymore."

What he saw out there made him realize, "I've got to change," he said.

Far from revolutionary

And the Bethlehem Area School District is changing. In the high schools, technology initiatives are bringing computers into the classrooms for hands-on experience. Programs to foster student pride are being put into place. Cooperative learning, outcomes-based education, and applied academics are quickly becoming the catch words to describe the school of the future.

But at the vo-tech, those concepts are far from revolutionary. Modern education, in some ways, is just catching up with the BAVTS curriculum.

Outcomes-based education, for example, is bringing ideas such as student portfolios into the schools, and asking teachers to test for competency rather than a letter grade.

However, the programs at vo-tech have always naturally been competency based, Mr. Foellner said.

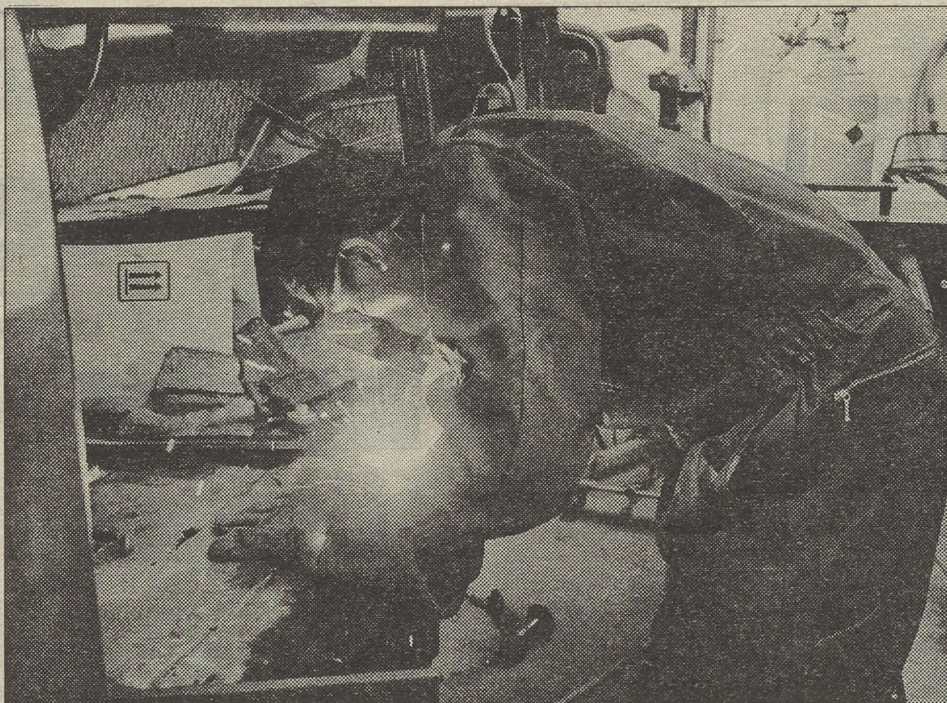

"What if I told you the person fixing your brakes was only 80 percent efficient?" he asked, "A 'B' isn't good enough on brakes."

Students also graduate with portfolios specific to their fields, which rate performance in hundreds of categories, from time management skills to definitions of basic theories. By next May, Mr. Foellner said, students will need to complete a final project to graduate.

Vo-tech offers 31 programs of study, ranging from baking to welding to health assistance. Programs run two or three years, for two or four periods daily, depending on the student and the subject. Beginning students are offered a rotation of courses for the first marking period, before they commit to a specific program.

Bethlehem vo-tech also applies academics, such as math and English, to real life situations. For example, a math class may be dedicated to using math to figure out the best buys at the supermarket; an English class may be geared towards writing resumes or making professional presentations.

"We don't need to be college prep versus vo-tech anymore," he said. "Every trend out there says you need a strong academic program combined with a strong applied program."

Vo-tech has also had a long relationship with the business community, a resource the school district has just begun to tap. The Bethlehem Steel Corp. provided vo-tech students with an IBM computer lab, and uses the facility to train its own employees. In addition, RexRoth Corporation donated $600,000 worth of hydraulics equipment.

"What college prep kid doesn't need that experience?" said Mr. Foellner.

Changing fields

In the light of new technology and trends, some vo-tech programs are falling by the wayside. The masonry program was recently cut in half because of a lack of interested students.

Ernest Ibarra, guidance service coordinator at vo-tech, said computer technology has changed some fields.

"With cabinetmaking, it takes a skilled and disciplined person

The programs at vo-tech have always naturally been competency based, Mr. Foellner said. "What if I told you the person fixing your brakes was only 80 percent efficient?" he asked.

to do that work," Mr. Ibarra said. "Now, if you ask for cabinets, they can bring you in and draw up the plans on a computer screen. It's opened up a lot of possibilities."

Mr. Ibarra said such developments are part of the ebb and flow of the vo-tech curriculum. "Your craftspersons are still needed, but because of economic reasons and mass production, they're not in high demand."

Yet students are being placed regularly in fields like construction and computer-aided drafting, said Mr. Foellner. "We don't have the students to meet the demands of employers who work with us," he said.

Other vo-tech programs now require higher education. Students taking graphic arts or engineering courses, for example, should plan on college. "In almost every case, there's a requirement for a post-secondary education," said Mr. Foellner, "Those kids know that coming in."

Ten years ago, Mr. Foellner said, a vo-tech student was expected to be in a general education class rather than a college prep track. He or she planned to go to work directly after high school, and live and work in the Lehigh Valley. It was generally perceived that the students didn't need competitive programs.

Randy Escoto, a former Freedom High School student, said outsiders sometimes stereotype "techies" as kids with long hair and leather jackets, who smoke and hang around in auto shop.

"I don't think that it's fair," he said, "There were a couple of students like that, but I also met many different kinds of people, who were in horticulture or graphic arts classes."

Mr. Foellner said the stereotypes are fading away as people realize vo-tech students work hard and have promising futures.

"There is an awareness that academic attainment is of equal importance to the student. Parents look at vo-tech differently, and students see the possibility of continuing education," he said, "They know they're going to have to hustle to succeed."

"I'll match these kids against any kids, any time."

Not too nice to be a winner

BY TOM HARPER

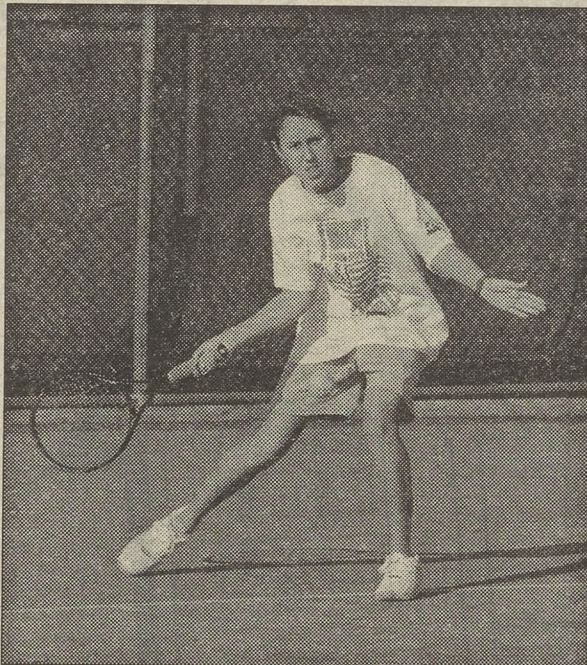

Some people would think Moravian College tennis player Caroline Smith is too nice for her own good.

"Every time I go out to play a match, my friends are always saying, 'Try not to be friends with them' or 'Try not to make new friends this time,' because they see me talking with my opponent in between changeovers and before and after a match," the ever-amiable junior said.

She admits she isn't the aggressive player that most tennis players usually need to be to be successful. In fact, her high school teammates at Liberty once nicknamed her "Bubba" to motivate her to be more aggressive. It worked somewhat, she said — but not much.

So just how is it that Caroline Smith, the Greyhounds' version of the all-American girl, has achieved a 9-1 record in singles competition and has been one of the instrumental players in Moravian's record-breaking season so far?

Let's check the facts first. The Moravian women's tennis program is enjoying its best season ever with a 9-1 record after knocking off archrival Elizabethtown 7-2 on Saturday afternoon. Caroline, the No. 3 seed for the Greyhounds, won her match to improve this season's win total to 9 and upped her career singles record to 23-10.

The squad is currently riding an eight-match winning streak and is unbeaten in Middle Atlantic Conference Commonwealth League play.

"This year is kind of a surprise," Caroline said of her team's amazing season, "because we didn't know how many freshmen we'd get, and coming into the fall we didn't know how much everyone had been playing. But the returning players worked hard over the summer, and the freshmen have been a big help and have stepped up a lot to the level of college tennis."

This season marks the first winning season in the history of women's tennis at Moravian. Caroline has been with the team since her freshman year, and she remembers how the team's outlook on tennis has changed since then.

"I think we were more out for fun and recreation my freshman year, whereas last year we got some freshmen in who were dedicated to tennis and who wanted to make the team better."

Moravian's friendly tiger

One of those aforementioned freshman was Cluny Erickson, the squad's No. 1 seeded singles player the past two seasons, who is now Caroline's doubles partner. The duo had become friends since the day Caroline showed her teammate the campus on a tour and housed her overnight.

The pair has posted an 8-1 record in doubles competition, including their win in the Elizabethtown match. Caroline said their different playing styles have combined effectively. "Cluny's an aggressive player. I'm not as aggressive. I'm more of a back-court player who will keep hitting the ball over the net until my opponent doesn't. Our combination has worked out well."

There's that perplexing point, this supposed lack of aggression. Especially in tennis, a lack of aggressive play can mean the difference between a win and a loss. But Caroline's impressive record refutes that theory.

Maybe her coach, Dawn Ketterman Benner, has the best answer. "She possesses strong fundamental skills and demonstrates excellent discipline, confidence and poise on the court."

She is a quiet leader, but on the inside, she's a real tiger."

That definition seems perfect until the last part: real tiger? Sure, she has to possess the fiery competitive spirit within that the nature of sports demands of its athletes. But where is the tiger in a player who acknowledges "my on-court and off-court personalities are the same."

Caroline is the third generation of the Smith family to be rooted in tennis. Her grandfather, both her parents, her aunt and uncle all have played or still play the game. The newest addition to the list is her brother Clay, now a sophomore at Liberty.

Her home is laden with tennis magazines and trophies from all members of the family. The trophy case at the top of the stairs is filled mostly with awards and photos from her father Art, who will be inducted into the Moravian College Tennis Hall of Fame on Nov. 12.

Academically, she's quite the animal, however, enjoying a 3.7 cumulative grade point average as well as being a Comenius Scholar, a scholarship which was given to her in 1992 as one of the top incoming freshmen.

As for her athletic skills, it still seems odd that a person of her outstanding talents could be so successful without having an aggressive side. But given how well she has done in her career and how much she means to Moravian's incredible season, it would be completely illogical to change anything now.
