Southside trash haulers ready to go this fall

By MICHELLE MEEH
Special to the Bethlehem Press

Trash haulers on Bethlehem's Southside are ready to go "in the zone" as part of a pilot program for zoned trash hauling starting in the fall.

Members of city council's Community Development Committee discussed the pilot program July 14, recommending the program for consideration by the full council at an upcoming meeting. Council member/committee chair Bryan Callahan and committee members Adam Waldron and Louis Stellato attended, joined by council members Michael Recchiuti and Eric Evans and Council President J. William Reynolds.

Mayor Bob Donchez said he has had four meetings with local haulers over the past 14 or 15 months, joined by the city police and health departments. Twenty-three haulers operate in Bethlehem, Donchez said, with about 12 on the Southside, creating a logistical challenge. Despite that challenge, the mayor said he is not an advocate of a single-hauler program. The Southside was chosen for the pilot program because 57 percent of trash-related violations occur there.

The pilot program, if approved by the full council, would specify a Monday and Tuesday pickup, possibly with some exceptions for weather-related delays. The program, to begin Oct. 5, the first Monday of the month, would also include changing the start of collection time to 5 a.m. from 6 a.m. This would allow trucks to finish busy streets before morning commuter traffic and school busses. The program would be evaluated after six months and at the end of a year.

Trash haulers are certified at the state level rather than by local municipalities.

Callahan was in favor of the pilot program. "I think the hauling situation in the city is broken as it is," he said. Recchiuti expressed reservations about starting at 5 a.m. across the city, since

The hidden price: Medical professionals can't reconcile rising use, death toll

By NATE JASTRZEMSKI

In the late 1880s, the modification of natural substances in pharmaceutical sciences was important work. Pneumonia and tuberculosis were then the leading causes of death worldwide, and in an effort to alleviate the suffering of so many sick and wasting people, Germany's Bayer Corporation introduced a fast-acting painkiller it called "heroin."

Doctors at the time had hoped heroin would be more effective and prove less addictive than its immediate predecessor, morphine. Such was not the case.

SPECIAL REPORT - PART 2

Signs of heroin use

By CHRIS PARKER
cparker@tntonline.com

Your son is behaving a bit oddly as of late. His grades are dropping, he's sleeping more than usual, he's become apathetic about sports and other activities he was once passionate about, and the money from his part-time job vanishes with astonishing speed, with nothing to show for it.

Straightening his room, you find that missing silver teaspoon, its bowl blackened from a flame held underneath.

A multicolored glass pipe turns up in his sock drawer, and you find a small plastic bag coated with white powder between the mattress and box spring.

Here, according to Narconon International, a drug-treatment program, are some signs to watch for if you suspect heroin use:

Paraphernalia: Burnt spoons, tiny plastic bags, small glass or metal pipes with a tan or whitish powdery or black tarry residue, syringes, rubber tubing.

Appearance: Tiny pupils, sleepy eyes, tendency to nod off, slow breathing, flushed skin, runny nose.

Actions: Vomiting, scratching, slurred speech, constipation, nausea, neglect of grooming, failure to eat, covering the arms with long sleeves.

treatment of people addicted to heroin, New York's Bellevue Hospital admitted 425 such patients. That year was 1915.

Today in 2015, hospitals, police and emergency responders are beleaguered by the continually growing presence and use of the drug, but nobody can discern exactly how much trouble it's causing.

Easy access

"It's a real problem," said Dr. Duane Siberski, an ER physician at Reading Hospital who often sees several overdose-related cases a week. "The ease of obtaining heroin ... it's known to be cheap. Access is there." He said emergency workers are always alert to the signs of drug use during their evaluations, especially when they're not breathing or are mental.

haulers may then be on the streets going to their pickup locations even earlier.

Director of Environmental Health Jessica Lucas told council members that city code Article 1161.10 covers overall public health and failure to comply with regulations. With proper notice given, she said, "We are able to enforce changes in overall pickup or time. "We have issued citations under 1161 and we have been successful," she said.

Evans noted council members have had a lot of feedback and the zoned hauling "was very well received."

Donchez noted starting at 5 a.m. is very important to the haulers but is "not a dealbreaker. It's a quality of life issue," he said.

ly depressed - clear signs, but ones that may have any number of causes. Identifying heroin users for proper treatment isn't always easy. And cataloging a database for hospital use or state or national statistics isn't going to happen any time soon.

"Downtown thing"

"There's a perception of, 'Oh, it's a downtown thing,'" Siberski said, "but the demographic is changing. It's the white kid from the suburbs [using heroin]. Heroin doesn't really pick and choose poverty." He explained it's tremendously difficult to grasp who is being hurt by heroin; those saved by first responders often refuse a hospital visit, and even in their own record keeping, hospitals must organize their patient information by the most immediate problem.

For instance, Siberski said an abscess from frequent injections or a psychiatric diagnosis may have root causes in heroin abuse, but the records wouldn't have a red flag indicating that's the case.

Record keeping

"The primary health issue when they enter the ER is how they're recorded. The presenting complaint may be 'not breathing, unconscious' ... but without doing a data dredge on all the charts that come through here it's almost impossible," said Siberski. "We have to do a certain amount of profiling. When we hear, 'Somebody's blue and not breathing,' and [the patient] is 70 years old, we usually assume a cardiac event. If they're 20 and not breathing it's probably heroin."

Eastern Pa. EMS Council Director John Kloss said that when drugs are involved, first responders are likely to arrive at the scene of a 911 call to find the patient alone and in dire straits, having been abandoned by friends afraid of legal ramifications or panicked by the overdose. It's one of many reasons he feels that as much as drug addiction is an individual problem, it also reflects shortcomings in education and societal support.

Financial impact

"I don't know where you begin to measure the financial impact, the social impact, the cost to the healthcare system," Kloss said. "It's not just the drug of choice, it's a drug that has long-term effects on your liver, your cardiac production ... just so many other bodily functions that it's more than just that 10-minute high. It leads to a lifetime of clinical challenges for these individuals."

Additionally, Kloss said EMS personnel often must contend with the criminal element or frightened residents and the threat of bloodborne pathogens. Exposure to bodily fluids and loose needles is often complicated by the patients themselves. Providers take precautions, he said, but once overdose patients wake up they don't know where they are or may be angry the treatment has ruined their high.

"They may be depressed or they become uncontrollable. And it's also what was mixed with [the heroin]; was it Fentanyl, meth or something that's going to take them from a depressed mood to a Superman syndrome? It's not uncommon to be assaulted in the pre-hospital arena.

"It's a fine balance."

ER knowledge

Siberski said long-time ER staff know when new dealers are operating or a new synthetic variation of the drug has hit the streets because the overdose cases rapidly increase. He said regular users usually end up in trouble when such changes occur. "We ask them when they had their last hit and how much it was - they'll tell you. They usually know what they're doing."

House Act 139

Kloss cites Pa. House Act 139, in the works since 2013, as a means of catching up societal responsibility with the need to save lives. It amends the 1972 controlled substance bill to include language immunizing from prosecution anyone who calls 911 or transports a person suffering a drug overdose, even if he or she possesses paraphernalia or is under the influence.

Both medical and legal professionals are hoping the changing law and greater availability of medicine will impact the final, sad result; drug overdose-related deaths.

Drug-related deaths

Lehigh County Coroner Scott Grim said the exact number is difficult to pinpoint, for reasons mentioned earlier and the presence of other toxic substances often found in the dead, but it has increased by half since 2010. In that year 47 overdose deaths were ruled accidental, with each year since rising above 60 or 70, and the highest being 81 in 2013.

"We have seen a tremendous increase in drug-related deaths in Lehigh County, which is tragic," Grim said. "It is most difficult and sad-denning to have to notify a loved one that their child, brother, sister and/or spouse had died and then advise them that the death was due to drugs, whether prescription, illicit or a combination of both.

"It wears on us"

"Unfortunately, the drugs are easily accessible to almost everyone today. In the coroner's office, we see the end result, the final result of an individual's life, regardless of the circumstance," Grim said. "It wears on us as human beings. However, our responsibility and duty is to determine a cause and manner of death and to try to bring some closure to the next of kin."

Narcan support

Northampton County District Attorney John Morganelli said he and the law enforcement community wishes to avoid that most tragic conclusion. Even given his office's mandate, he said he supports wide use of medicines such as Naloxon, more commonly called Narcan, and laws that give some legal breathing room to someone calling for medical assistance for an overdosing companion.

"I prefer a call [to EMS] to prosecuting people," he said. "We're trying to send out the word; if it's a choice between life and death, prosecution is secondary."

The distribution of Narcan kits throughout the state to EMS and police entities has begun largely through a sort of grant through Capital BlueCross, Morganelli said, but not all counties want them because of the additional training and documentation involved.

Siberski said that program is targeting high-risk counties such as Carbon and Schuylkill.

Miracle cure danger

But as Kloss explained, distributing a miracle cure for the miracle cure may only encourage abuse by addicts willing to plunge over the edge if they know a Narcan injection will bring them back within heartbeats.

The fact is we can't rely on medicine to protect us, our communities and the ones we love from heroin. It's a shared responsibility in education and even compassion.

"It's society's problem," Kloss said.

Heroin addiction: Finding help

"There are no specific population types because addiction does not discriminate. When clients do come to our department for assistance, they are struggling with addiction to alcohol, drugs, or sometimes, gambling. Most clients we see present with alcohol or heroin addiction. Many clients are dually diagnosed, having an addiction issue as well as a mental health issue. Many of our clients are also involved with the criminal justice system. Success depends on the level of client investment in his or her recovery as well as the treatment provided being the most appropriate level of care for the client. Successful programs use evidenced based treatment modalities. Clients are therapeutically challenged to change cognitive and behavioral patterns and adopt healthy coping skills while building sober support systems."

Area officers recognized for their aggressive driving enforcement

By ROBIN EBERHARDT
reberhardt@ttonline.com

Lehigh County officials commended selected municipal police officers June 17 for their efforts to curb aggressive driving in the area.

Among the nine officers honored at last week's ceremony at the Allentown Police Academy, Officer Mark Lichty from the Bethlehem Township Police Department and Officer Steven Marks from the Bethlehem City Police Department were recognized for their efforts. The agencies in last year's campaign wrote a total of 53,587 citations related to aggressive driving, according to a press release.

Mark Alonge, project coordinator and grant administrator for the Aggressive Driving Enforcement and Education Campaign, said in an interview the campaign's yearly focus depends on crash data collected every year. Alonge is also the executive director of the North Central Highway Safety Network.

The Pennsylvania Department of Transportation analyzes the statistics every year and provides funding for the areas determined to need it the most. Alonge said he has been with the aggressive driving program since it began in 2006, which is generally focused on speeding but includes other forms of aggressive driving. Speeding accounted for almost 60 percent of the aggressive-driving related citations last year for the police agencies that participated in the program.

"Speeding is the number one problem every year," Alonge said. "That's always going to be the focus."

Robin Rivera, traffic safety coordinator for NCHSN, said in an interview the officers at the ceremony were given awards for "aggressively enforcing" the laws against aggressive driving in Lehigh County. She said in a press release the focus of last year's campaign, for which the officers were given awards, concentrated on distracted driving, work zone safety violations and speeding.

"Each of them were nominated by their chief of police for outstanding effort and contribution to the aggressive driving program," Rivera said.

Alonge said at the meeting he will begin to direct his attention to the Buckle Up PA initiative to raise seat belt usage in the area, so he urged the officers present to issue secondary seat belt citations to motorists already stopped for other reasons in order to "hit home" on seat belt enforcement.

"The only way to get them to buckle up is by writing a citation," Alonge said at the meeting.

The summer wave of the program, set to begin July 6, will focus on motorists running red lights, tailgating and speeding, prominent issues during the summer months. The program will include the Pennsylvania State Police and more than 330 municipal police departments will be part of the statewide initiative.

The county will also be promoting a "coordinated effort" against aggressive driving, said Bob Webre, law enforcement liaison for NCHSN. As part of the coordinated effort, Webre suggested officers all go out and crack down on aggressive driving together on July 14.

"The bigger the splash, the better it works," Webre said.

Officer Bryan Losagio

from the Salisbury Township Police Department, who was recognized for making a large number of citations in the past wave of the program, gave a presentation at the ceremony sharing his wisdom on the ways to enforce the aggressive driving campaign. He reviewed traffic violation triggers officers should use to pull over aggressive drivers in high-risk zones. David Wood, an officer of the Fountain Hill Police Department, assisted Losagio in demonstrating ways for officers to spot faulty inspection stickers on vehicles.

South Bethlehem's 150th anniversary plans reviewed

HISTORICAL SOCIETY

By ROSS SONNENBLICK
 Special to the Bethlehem Press

South Bethlehem celebrates its 150th birthday this year, and the South Bethlehem Historical Society is out to ensure people notice.

Its board of directors discussed the details for commemorating the milestone at its July 15 meeting at Victory Firehouse.

In all its history, South Bethlehem has never claimed a flag or emblem of its own ... until now. Those attending SBHS's annual public meeting Sept. 24 in Northampton Community College's Fowler Center will witness the unveiling of the exclusive South Bethlehem insignia, which will grace banners draped from light poles on the Southside starting in October. The banners will further be emblazoned with two phrases: "South Bethlehem's 150th Anniversary" and "Banner furnished by Members of the SBHS."

Additionally, Bethlehem's own legendary professional football player, Chuck Bednarik, is going to be remembered with a plaque. Board members spent much of their nearly two-hour meeting debating about its placement.

Bednarik aspired to work at Bethlehem Steel as his father had done before him, but when the Philadelphia Eagles came to call, he could not

Board member William K. Scheirer, who graduated from Liberty HS in 1955 (a few years after Bednarik), proposed a motion to contact Mayor Robert Donchez and Bethlehem Area School District Superintendent Dr. Joseph Roy and say that the SBHS agrees that the most logical location for Bednarik's latest plaque would close to the corner of Elizabeth Avenue and Grenadier Boulevard, directly outside of Frank Banko Field. There it would be "readily visible but not inconvenient to property owners," according to SBHS President Stephen Barron. Bednarik competed there during his time at LHS. The entire board favored the motion.

The SBHS has another plan in the cards - the "Heights Neighborhood Project" - will preserve the important history of that particular cultural community through a colorful, interactive website, complete with background information, photographs and personal testimonies. The neighborhood began at the corner of Anthracite and Second streets and extended upward. It was the site of the notorious picket-strikes conducted by steelworkers during the 1930s and 1950s.

Board member Tom Carroll said that during its heyday the neighborhood was "teeming with activity." Elderly Bethlehem residents who had lived there recall the ethnic food stores and vendors that lined the crowded, diverse streets.

Before the project can be implemented, SBHS has a few kinks to work out. It needs to cement the support of Lehigh University. Lehigh houses the society's inventory of historical artifacts and records, and Lehigh students will be key collaborators for the project. Support from local businesses from that time period is also needed. SBHS members are still researching the Heights, and no official timeline for the project has been developed.

Lastly, SBHS is continuing its series of "Steeple and Steel Tours." Participants pay $15 for a package including a one-hour tour of steelworkers' churches (tour-goers enter one of them), a typical steelworker's lunch, and another one-hour segment during which tour guides lead the group through the Steel plant itself. The next two offerings of the Tour are July 25 and Aug. 22.

SBHS members conduct the tours, and while the members range in age and in life experiences, they share a passion for preserving the vibrant

Council tables name change

By BERNIE O'HARE
Special to the Bethlehem Press

Among the matters considered by Northampton County Council at its July 16 meeting was a Seth Vaughn and Ken Kraft ordinance to call on voters to decide whether council members could change their title to commissioners. That was tabled. So was a Seth Vaughn and Mat Benol ordinance that would ban smoking anywhere on county property, even on a rowboat in the middle of Minsi Lake.

Council also refused to tinker with a resolution unanimously adopted in April, granting a 4.5 percent raise to some clerical workers. Executive John Brown called it a scrivener's error.

Council refused to get involved in the dispute between Brown and 17 magisterial district employees over whether he really meant to give them that raise or had just made a mistake. It had been discussed at length the previous day at Ken Kraft's Personnel Committee. Seth Vaughn missed it. Instead of viewing the video, he asked council members to fill him in. And they did, even though the matter had already been tabled.

Lamont McClure suggested tabling the "council to commissioner" ballot question. Conceded this name change was not "sufficiently grave" to bring to voters, he nevertheless defended Kraft and Vaughn, insisting it is a "legitimate point of view to have."

NORTHAMPTON COUNTY

LV Planning Commission Executive Director Becky Bradley updates council and predicts a business boom in several local townships.

In a letter to The Express Times, Hayden Phillips had criticized this measure as a waste of taxpayer money.

Only Kraft and Mat Benol voted against the motion to table.

The smoking ordinance, by Vaughn's own admission, needed some work. He told council that he was willing to remove the prohibition on smoking in county parks, but was the sole council member to vote against a table motion that essentially sent his ordinance up in smoke.

Only one member of council, Phillips, was willing to untable the resolution that would allow Brown to reverse a pay raise that he had proposed himself and council unanimously approved.

Brown and Deputy Administrator Cathy Allen have insisted they never intended to grant raises to 17 district judge employees who are already at the top of their pay scale.

Administrators have suggested a cash payout, but it is reportedly only $500, and only for one year.

Peg Ferraro was distressed that "the people on the front lines of the justice system" are paid so poorly, and was also upset that union representative Justus James was not assisting them. They are using Bethlehem Attorney Chris Spadoni.

Council has been reluctant to inject themselves in this matter, preferring instead to see that Brown work things out with Spadoni.

In other business, Becky Bradley, executive director of the Lehigh Valley Planning Commission, had some interesting details about the Lehigh Valley. Though she has no crystal ball, she is predicting a business boom in South Bethlehem and Allen townships.

She said an expansion of the Panama Canal is nearing completion that is going to allow much more freight come up the Eastern Seaboard. Because seaports have no land to expand, she believes places like South Bethlehem will become inland rail ports for large amounts of international freight.

The FedEx facility along Route 248, she believes, is going to help the airport by allowing for more air freight, and should also result in a large number of businesses.

WALLA GAZOO
Annual tourney set for Aug. 17

The Bethlehem Chamber of Commerce will hold its annual Walla Gazoo golf tournament and clambake on Aug. 17 at 400 Illick's Mill Road.

ADA
City changes forms to comply

The 25th anniversary of the signing of the Americans with Disabilities Act is July 26. The City of Bethlehem recently updated the city event forms to comply with the ADA. To comply, event planners have to include five feet of walking space on a sidewalk and 10 feet of walking space on a road. This also allows for better vendor placement.

To assist special event planners, the city has begun holding special activity meetings from 2 to 4 p.m. on the second Wednesday of each month at City Hall, 10 E. Church St. A representative from each department will be present to answer questions or address any issues.

If the event is new, the planner(s) must attend at least one of the meetings. RSVP by calling 610-865-7079.

PLANS

history of South Bethlehem. Barron "saw the end of the golden age of the Southside," in his words, but he wants to keep that time alive in people's minds.

Scheirer closed the meeting by recounting one final anecdote about the Steel. His sister, he said, had frequently worked into the night as a schoolgirl, but she had always been comforted by the dinging and clanging from the Steel plant, because she had known that she was not working alone.

Today, the banging and crashing has ceased, but the sounds still echo in the minds of the members of the South Bethlehem Historical Society.

Council debates TV disposal

By DANIELLE MARTIN
Special to the Bethlehem Press

The July 6 Fountain Hill council meeting covered everything from TV set disposals to police force tasers.

"We can't be known as the dumping place for TV's," said Fountain Hill Mayor Jose Rosado, who seeks to rid the borough of unwanted, abandoned sets.

"We need to pick them up and get them off the curb," he said.

According to council member Anthony Branco, TV sets are considered hazardous waste and cannot simply be thrown into dumpsters. After some investigating on his part, he uncovered a company that would collect unbroken sets for 38 cents a pound. He suggested citizens could take said sets to recycling on their own, or the borough could organize a cleanup day twice a year.

In terms of payment, it could come out of recycling funds or homeowners' pockets. Either way, the council decided to

FOUNTAIN HILL
Council considers hiring bill collection agency

The brief meeting for the Fountain Hill work session June 17 left one clear message from council member Anthony Branco. According to Branco, the borough is in talks with a collection agency for delinquent sewer and garbage bills. He did not want to surprise the community if the council agreed on a contract resulting in charges sent to those with unpaid fees.

After three years of unpaid delinquent fees, the accumulation threatens the financial health of the community with over 200 debtors. Without incoming funds, the borough would have to raise taxes forcing responsible citizens to pick up the slack of those less active. Unwilling to take that route, council now calls upon an agency to pursue unpaid bills.

October is the potential month in which said contract will be signed.

Also tired of general litter, Rosado sought to organize a method of cleaning the trails and walkways of the community. The most popular

After the swearing-in of Officer Steven Fritzing, promoting his position from part-time to full, it came to council's attention that taser training in the borough has been successful. Since their inclusion some months back, tasers have become effective for the police force.

In regards to the "No Parking" situation on Church Street, Mayor Rosado, the principle of Fountain Hill ES Lisa Lynch and Chief of Police Edward Bachert agreed to make said signs a permanent fixture. Too much congestion on Moravia Street instigated the experimental signage a few months ago. Though complaints resounded in the early weeks, the experiment succeeded in lessening traffic congestion in the area.

Lynn Avenue bridge closure

Lynn Avenue has been closed from Route 412 to Sixth Street as the South Bethlehem roadway undergoes surface renovation and related work by PennDOT. A detour for local vehicles has been posted in the area. According to the Bethlehem Department of Public Works, the city is planning to demolish the antiquated and rusty bridge structure "likely, late this year." The construction of a new and wider bridge is scheduled to start in the early spring of 2016. The completion of the bridge project and reopening of Lynn Avenue is expected to follow in the fall of the same year in time for the busy holiday season in the Christmas City, USA. The present 1925 truss bridge is listed on Bridgehunter.com as a "historical and notable bridge of the United

Hindu Sees Jesus

Prabhu Charan was born in India. He was the seventh son of devout Hindus, but his six brothers had died from a strange disease. In an attempt to break the curse of death, his parents dedicated him to be a Hindu priest. When he was just 18 months old, his father also died. Convinced that she was the greatest of all sinners, Prabhu's mother committed her son and herself to a life of Hindu devotion. Passing through the bazaar one morning, 12-year-old Prabhu noticed three musicians. One played a violin while the other two sang. "Who are those men?" he asked his mother. "Oh, just some men singing of how their God died for the sins of mankind." "Mother! None of our gods died for us. If their God died for them, He must love them very much."

A few weeks later, Prabhu went to live with his uncle in another village where he would prepare for the Hindu priesthood. Each day on his way to school, he passed an Assemblies of God church. He always felt a warmth inside as he passed. On Sunday mornings when he heard the church bells ring, he went and stood at the church gate. One Sunday, Missionary Valborg Frandsen called to him. Speaking reassuringly, she took him into the church. When Pastor J.J. Singh finished his sermon, he invited people to come forward to pray. "It was as though a hand pushed me off the bench," Prabhu said. "I found myself standing in front of the congregation simply praying, 'God who died for the sins of mankind, come to me.'"

Suddenly a brilliant light filled the sanctuary. In the light was a Man hanging. "Blood was coming down the Man's face and dripping from his hands," Prabhu said. "He said to me three times, 'I am the God who died for the sins of mankind.'" Prabhu fell to his knees and wept. For two hours he cried and prayed. When he rose from his knees, he was a Christian. Prabhu's uncle was incensed by his conversion and made plans to kill him. To save her son's life, his mother sent him to Missionary Frandsen who cared for him for 10 years. He attended Bible College and entered the ministry. Later he was elected the general superintendent for the North India Assemblies of God, for more than 20 years! -Mountain Movers, 9/92

THE BETHLEHEM PRESS'
Athletes of the Year
FREEDOM HIGH SCHOOL

Jake Young: Freedom's
Jack of All Trades

By PETER CAR
pcar@tnonline.com

When it comes to sports, the Young family is synonymous with competition.

With three brothers parading their way through Freedom's doors over the years, Josh, Jake and Joe Young have cemented a legacy in the black and gold that will certainly leave a lasting legacy among the Patriot faithful.

But for Jake Young, his senior season was a great exit to a school that has been ingrained with himself and his brothers.

As the middle brother sandwiched between older sibling Josh, who is a junior in college and upcoming Freedom junior Joe, Jake Young helped bring the Freedom family back together with a memorable football season, followed by a historic campaign by the wrestling team and capped off with a playoff appearance in the spring for the baseball team.

Along with the success, came the accolades of being nominated as a first-team East Penn Conference defensive back, a first-team EPC wrestler at 170 pounds and lastly, Freedom's top athlete in 2014-15.

That's why it was an easy decision for Jake Young to be this year's Freedom Male Athlete of the Year for the Bethlehem Press.

The three-sport star, who will spend his next four years at Columbia University playing football and wrestling, is a Patriot that all of Freedom will miss.

"I've always been someone that loves to compete and that probably comes with the territory when you grow up with two other brothers," Young said. "My younger brother [Joe] and I would always compete against each other and our older brother Josh was always the one that would kind of settle things. He was like the voice of reason and someone that we've always looked up to. He really became the example that Joe and I have strived to become. It was really fun growing up with my brothers."

And as time flies by, these three brothers have grown up quickly into a trio of excellent athletes. Josh is a junior at Franklin & Marshall and is a member of the football team, and is likely to give wrestling a shot this season as well.

Joe is the quarterback of the football team and will be one of the best signal-callers in the area next season, while Jake will test out of his abilities in the classroom and on the field at Columbia.

While playing three sports in high school is nothing out of the ordinary, playing two sports in college will be challenging.

"I know it's going to be tough to play two sports," Jake said, "but I only have four more years to be able to compete in a team environment like this. I love both sports too much."

Young's love for sports may have been apart of him since he started playing, but it also grew after suffering

Helen Hsu: focused, goal-oriented, humble

By KATIE MCDONALD
kmcaldonald@tnonline.com

She may be an East Penn Conference champion in golf and a District 11 champion in swimming, but recent Freedom High School graduate, Helen Hsu, is all about relationships: building them, maintaining them, and cherishing them on the golf course, in the swimming pool, and throughout her day-to-day life.

Hsu, this year's Bethlehem Press Female Player of the Year from Freedom, is just one of the girls, yet gets respect from everyone because she is goal-oriented, focused, humble, and approachable.

"As a sophomore, she seemed like a senior, and everyone respected her immediately," said Freedom golf coach Mike Evans. "They learned a lot by being around her; getting it done."

Always meticulous with the notes she keeps about her game, Hsu set the bar high.

"She was fantastic. She doesn't hit many stray balls, but if she hit into a tree line, she wouldn't go for the hero shot. She'd punch back on the fairway," Evans said.

Hsu was also happy to help her teammates, one-on-one.

Evans said, "If someone had a hitch in their swing, Helen would step aside and help them. Even mentally, she would help them."

This past season, Hsu felt a lot more in control of her own swing.

"I had some good scores, and towards the end, I locked into the 70s.

I had a rough start, but I finished okay. I don't have that much big tournament experience," she said.

After this past golf season, Hsu hadn't picked up a club until recently, and that's when something occurred to her.

"The most awesome thing about golf is the people you meet randomly because you spend time communicating with them," said Hsu. "It reminded me why golf is such a cool sport."

Hsu faced some strong competitors over the years; specifically, from Central Catholic, Emmaus, and Parkland, but as Evans sees it, it was a nice gauge to let her know where she stood.

"Getting back to states this year reaffirmed her. She really wanted to get back," he said.

Hsu also wanted to get back to states in swimming, and did so, coming home with two medals.

As with golf, Hsu kept meticulous notes and drawings regarding how she felt, how much sleep she got, how she did, and what she needed. Those notes included her goals, one year at a time.

"My goals in swimming really impacted my life. I learned that you have to dream high. Even if you don't reach your goal, you get somewhere close, and if you don't now, there's always another chance," said Hsu.

This season, Hsu was the district champ in the 200 IM and the 100 backstroke, but Freedom swimming coach playing, but it also grew after suffering a torn labrum in his right shoulder in high school that prevented him from playing baseball his sophomore and junior years, as well as forced him to sit out wrestling his junior year.

"I would be lying if I said I wasn't worried about what the future was going to hold for me after my surgery," he said, "but I just tried to stay positive. I still can't really throw with my right arm anymore. God has a plan for me and that's how I look at it."

With faith being a major part of the Young family, maybe some extra prayers were used during his senior year to help him enjoy a ceremonious farewell party.

After the football team went 2-8 his junior year, they responded mightily with a 9-3 campaign that united their whole community.

Young was the star of the Patriots defense last fall, racking up 58 tackles, and two interceptions for touchdowns as a defensive back. He also caught 44 balls for 585 yards and five touchdowns as a wide receiver, catching all those balls from his little brother.

Wrestling season came next and the Patriots made history, finishing the year 24-0, becoming the first team in school history to finish the regular season undefeated, while getting a piece of the East Penn Conference championship alongside Bethlehem Catholic.

Young finished his career with 108 career victories, posting a 34-5 mark last season, en route to a third-place finish at districts, but ultimately falling a match short of qualifying for the PIAA tournament.

Then came spring and Young's first season of varsity baseball, where he capped it off with .315 batting average, .493 OBP, 18 runs, 10 RBI and seven stolen bases.

"It really was as good of a senior year that anyone can ask for," Young said. "We turned it around in football, went undefeated in wrestling and then I got to play my first season of varsity baseball. I couldn't have asked for a better ending."

That's probably the same thing most Freedom fans would say too.

Hsu

Jon Larson and Hsu decided fairly late in the season which events she would compete in at the district meet.

Hsu was quicker in the IM at that point in the season, and although Larson knew she would make states based on time, winning districts was not a guarantee. Hsu herself was not so sure how fast she could go, so she did some calculations.

"On paper, it looked like I could do it. My teammates thought I could do it, but I didn't think I could," she said.

Hsu predicted a time of 2:04, and that is exactly what she swam at districts.

Larson said, "[Parkland's] Erika Freeman took second to Helen at districts. They pushed each other so hard that when they looked up at the scoreboard at their time, they were shocked by how fast they swam."

Hsu's other event at districts, the 100 backstroke, is all about the legs.

Larson said, "Helen's strong point is in her legs, but there were a few swims this season when she wasn't using them. I let her wear the tech suit, and she had a lot more confidence."

Hsu also competed in relays, and at the state meet this past year, the Patriots had two experienced and two inexperienced swimmers on the team.

"Helen treats everyone the same. She's not a prima donna, and she's not unapproachable," said Larson.

If given the choice, Hsu prefers the competitive spirit of districts to states.

"At districts, the room gets so loud, and all your teammates are there, and you know you have a shot. At districts, you're swimming against people you know, people you care about," she said.

Hsu will attend Cornell University this fall as an environmental science major and a member of the swim team, but she will continue to be appreciative of what both Evans and Larson brought to her golf game and to her swimming.

"[Coach Evans] allowed me to enjoy the game a lot. I like how personalized he is, and he holds everyone responsible. Jon brought stability. He doesn't hold personal pride against you and your swimming. He knows what's best [for each swimmer]," said Hsu.

What Larson will miss about Hsu the most is her ability to keep a coach honest.

"Easier workouts could be easier for a coach, for example, and if she doesn't understand where the workout is going, she will ask, and she does it respectfully," Larson said.

Hsu will also continue to be appreciative of Freedom High School.

"The Freedom family really exists because teachers and coaches support us on and off the field, and they help us be who we are. The whole Freedom atmosphere was cool this year. There was support between athletes and non-athletes. It was very special," said Hsu, "and my parents Rick Hsu and Pei-jung Lin have always supported me."

Liberty girls reach SportsFest title game

By PETER CAR
pcar@tnonline.com

Liberty's girls' basketball team made a run to the A-Town Throwdown finals at SportsFest on Sunday night, but the Hurricanes couldn't top Parkland in the championship, falling 31-27.

Liberty, Freedom and Bethlehem Catholic each made it out of their pools to advance to the final round of 16, with Liberty trekking the deepest of Bethlehem's teams.

The Hurricanes defeated Allen, Stroudsburg and North Hunterdon en route to the finals. Meanwhile, Bethlehem Catholic reached Sunday's quarterfinals before losing to Northwestern 42-36 to be eliminated.

Freedom dropped their opening round of 16 game against Stroudsburg 30-22 to fall out of contention.

On the boys side, Bethlehem Catholic and Freedom made it out of their pools to advance to the final bracket, while Liberty missed out on Sunday's action due to a point differential tie-breaker by coming in second in their pool.

Freedom lasted the longest on the boys side, making an appearance in the quarters before falling to eventual champion Nazareth 34-19. Be-ahi fell victim to the Blue Eagles in the first round of Sunday's action, losing 55-46 to end their run.

Freemansburg falls in Region 2 Tournament

By PETER CAR
pcar@tnonline.com

After a 5-13 NORCO legion season, many people would have written off Freemansburg's chances entering the Region 2 Tournament, but for the hosts it was an opportunity to prove they belonged.

Freemansburg saw their tournament run come to an end on Sunday following a 3-1 loss to Pine Grove. The defeat eliminated them from the tournament after losing their opener to North Parkland 7-1.

But for manager Chris Medei, he was proud of his team's ability to compete with some of the best teams in the region.

"I think our kids proved that they belonged here," he said. "We played against real good competition and we battled. I was real proud of how our kids played in both games."

Freemansburg took Lehigh Valley Legion champion, North Parkland, to the brink in Saturday night's contest, trailing only 1-0 in the eighth inning before the Bufaloes eventually broke the score open with four runs in that frame, followed by two more in the ninth.

"I think our kids proved that they belonged here. We played against real good competition and we battled. I was real proud of how our kids played in both games."

FREEMANSBURG LEGION HEAD COACH
CHRIS MEDEI

Against Pine Grove, Freemansburg had their chances to keep their tourney alive, as they outthit the opposition 9-4, but never really threatened with their opportunities.

"Most of our hits came when we had two outs and didn't really have anything going," said Medei. "And when you only score two runs in 18 innings of play, that's a tough scenario to be successful in."

The tournament continued on Monday with Pine Grove topping Perkiomen 8-6 and Muhlenberg besting West Lawn 8-4.

Hellertown handled North Parkland 14-2, giving them the inside track of winning the Region 2 tourney, as they only need to defeat the North Parkland-Muhlenberg winner once on Wednesday to advance to states.

Overall, Medei noted that 1,300 fans attended through the weekend, despite the muggy conditions. The response from hosting the event has been overwhelmingly positive.

"It's been a wonderful experience," said Medei of hosting. "The heat has been rough on everyone, but I can't say enough about how great our volunteers have been. I think people were happy with how we've conducted this tournament."

And Medei was happy that his team was able to be apart of it.

"This was the best our kids played all year," he said. "We had a week and a half off before the tournament, so we were just able to practice and focus on the little things. We have a pretty young team and the guys really matured over the course of the summer and they played their hearts out."

BETHLEHEM COUNCIL Tower zoning proposal decried

By NATE JASTRZEMSKI
njastrzemi@tnonline.com

City council was quick through its affairs July 7, breezing through its meeting in less than an hour. But that efficiency was made moot when a number of residents were ready to share some serious concerns.

The primary topic raised by citizens was news of a proposed zoning change that will affect the legal use of space on the 53-acre, 21-story Martin Tower complex. The proposal would expand long-expected residential units to include retail use. As the property is part of the Community Redevelopment and Incentive Zone, local business owners are concerned about the building essentially becoming a self-contained shopping district that will sap consumers from existing downtowns.

Hotel Bethlehem Managing Partner Bruce Haines outlined this perspective, calling the news disturbing and that it would further undercut city businesses already under assault by Allentown's Neighborhood Improvement Zone. He said the retail incentives and the businesses they would attract to the location would only compound current small business difficulties elsewhere.

"Strip malls killed the downtown in the 60s and the 70s. Lifestyle centers like the Promenade severely impacted the downtown in the 1990s. A mixed-use Martin Tower property is bad city planning," Haines said. "The property needs to stay residential."

Moravian Book Shop's Dana DeVito and Donegal Square's Neville Gardner stated their agreement.

DeVito said the book store is already hard-pressed to support its current size, and more competition may force them to downsize in the city and move some products to satellite locations. A shame, she said, for maybe the oldest continuously operating book store in the world.

Gardner, who is also president of the Downtown Business Association, said he was only speaking on his own behalf, but that he would almost certainly be back at the DBA's behest if this proposal remains viable.

Council itself mostly performed maintenance with its votes, moving some funds about and considering a proposal from Advanced Storage Technology, Inc. to build a new salt building. Council also made its annual vote to increase parking fines in high-traffic neighborhoods during Musikfest.

Sally's a 'beacon of hope'

By BERNIE O'HARE
Special to the Bethlehem Press

"Sally," a 53 year-old pink firetruck dedicated to raising awareness of women's health issues, was dedicated during a brief ceremony at SteelStacks recently. Though no longer making fire calls, this vehicle will now make home visits to women battling illness.

As Lehigh Valley Pink Heals founder Bill Andress explained, Sally recently visited a woman battling cancer in Nazareth, at the lead of a procession of volunteer firefighters who provided flowers, hugs and hope.

About 40 well-wishers attended the dedication, including State

Rep. Marcia Hahn. She presented Andress with a certificate of recognition from the State House.

"It's the first time I've ever been served papers in public," Andress quipped.

Sally has room for people to chronicle their own battles with illness. In black pen, they inscribe encouraging words or messages to loved ones who have passed on.

The star of the ceremony was Mae Trexler, a 96 year-old woman who faced cancer 18 years ago, and beat it.

All funds raised by Pink Heals, which is 100 percent volunteer and 100 percent nonprofit, stays in the local community.

"We are about serving women, not serving causes," insisted Andress.

He presented a $1,745.97 check to Paula Sue Ream, executive director of the LV Cancer Support Community. Her group offers a wide variety of programs and services to people battling cancer, all at no charge.

The Rev. Peter Bredlau, pastor at St. Mark's Lutheran Church in Bethlehem Township, called Sally a "beacon of hope for all people - patients, survivors and families." He also joked that he hopes he looks as good as Sally does when he's 53. That's largely due to Bethlehem Area Vo-Tech students, who turned a rusting and decommissioned firetruck into a pink lady.

BETHLEHEM AUTHORITY '22,000 acres, 115,000 people'

By NATE JASTRZEMSKI
njastrzemi@tnonline.com

The numbers are used again and again to stress what was at risk: 22,000 acres of healthy watershed woodland and 115,000 people who depend on the water it provides. They are used in the final draft of a document from the Bethlehem Authority to deflect the incoming PennEast gas pipeline. Fixed with the signatures of board President John Talarico and Mayor Bob Donchez, copies are en route to PennEast, Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) and state office of the Department of Environmental Protection.

The 43-page risk analysis, prepared by Maser Consulting, offers an array of maps, structural reports and other data presenting a single clear impression: If it can be avoided, we don't want the pipeline on authority watershed property at all.

Highlights include the proposed pipeline's proximity to transmission lines and natural water sources, Wild Creek Dam and Wire Ridge Tunnel in Towamensing, which was built of concrete in 1939. Engineers suggest normal construction is a low risk for damaging these sites, but a catastrophic accident at either one would have a significant impact on the water supply. It might even damage existing petroleum pipelines in the area, compounding the threat.

Maser said, "The Bethlehem Authority watershed and its transmission mains can convey up to 33 million gallons per day (MGD) to the city of Bethlehem and 10 other municipalities. Should this sourcewater be incapacitated, the city has emergency interconnection agreements with five adjacent utilities. However, these emergency interconnections would provide only a total of 5.04 MGD of water supply."

During final review July 9, it was suggested PennEast simply doesn't realize just how close its proposed gas line is to existing water lines. Board member Vaughn Gower said, "It's a big deal to build a gas pipe 67 feet from a transmission tunnel."

The Maser document notes PennEast had observed that number and moved the line 200 feet further along a mountain slope.

The study clearly suggests it would be safest for PennEast to plan their pipeline outside the watershed altogether, preferably east. Barring that, it includes a list of other recommendations, primarily regarding readjusting the pipeline both vertically and horizontally away from significant points along the water route.

When asked what recourse the authority has if PennEast chooses to ignore the recommendations, solicitor Jim Broughal said PennEast must consider it still has to negotiate for easements and rights-of-way, and that ultimately it will have to abide by whatever FERC chooses to require. But, he said, between a number of state agencies in Pennsylvania and New Jersey, "PennEast has a lot of hoops to jump through yet."

The next meeting is scheduled for 4 p.m. Aug. 13 at City Hall.

'Hyde' bound

Notre Dame Summer Theatre back with musical classic

By LUKE MUENCH
Special to The Press

For many, "Jekyll and Hyde" is a classic piece of literature and theater that transcends time and tells the gripping story of a rather torn man who struggles with his own identity.

But for Rody Gilkeson, director of the Notre Dame Summer Theatre-Revelations Productions' "Jekyll & Hyde: The Musical," July 24 - Aug. 2, Notre Dame High School, Bethlehem Township, it also stands as an exciting opportunity.

"I had wanted to do this last year, but the bishop of Notre Dame High School didn't feel that it was appropriate to be performed during the school year," Gilkeson says. "So, with the help of one of the priests working in the high school, we were able to get the approval for it to be performed over the summer."

A simple statement, yes, but a daunting task still. This is particularly accentuated by the fact that all funding for the project comes out of Gilkeson's pocket. While the space is provided to him by the high school, everything else is financed by he and his wife, Elizabeth Marsh-Gilkeson, from costuming and props to the smallest things we take for granted, like air conditioning.

Having done this for many years, however, this isn't an unfamiliar roadblock, encouraging Gilkeson to come "as close to Broadway as possible on a budget."

This point has been accentuated over time as he has watched various summer theaters in the area "fall by the wayside," unable to keep up with the monetary demands, and those that have stood the test of time tend to be expensive. "We try to do a quality show for a reasonable price, also using it as a teaching tool for kids."

But what really fuels Gilkeson's passion for Notre Dame Summer Theatre is the use of raising money for scholarships for students at the high school.

The scholarship program was started in 2010 in the name of Kim Gillow, a Notre Dame High School student who was passionate about theater and died of cancer in 2009 at age 14.

Gilkeson and his wife founded Notre Dame Summer Theatre in 2010, presenting "Evita," followed by "My Fair Lady," 2011; "Kiss Me Kate," 2012, and "Les Miserable," 2013. The troupe did not present a musical last summer.

Notre Dame Summer Theatre's "Jekyll & Hyde: The Musical" is believed to be only the second time for a Lehigh Valley production of the show (MunOpCo presented it in 2003).

Gilkeson felt it only natural to do another musical, particularly one as romantic as "Jekyll & Hyde: The Musical."

Unlike the literature counterpart, the script for the stage version of "Jekyll & Hyde" focuses much more heavily on the two female love interests, Jekyll's fiancée, who is only mentioned in passing in the original text, and Lucy, the prostitute who falls in love with Hyde.

Because of this, many of the male characters, such as Utterson, take a backseat to the lovers' quarrels, hardly appearing but for the occasional brief moment.

This is all the more supported by the music. "It is some of the most beautiful music you will ever hear with that classic Robert Stevenson storyline," says Gilkeson excitedly.

The musical is based on Stevenson's 1886 novel, "The Strange Case Of Dr. Jekyll And Mr. Hyde," which was made into several films, notably a 1941 version starring Spencer Tracy, Ingrid Bergman and Lana Turner.

The stage show, which debuted on Broadway in 1997, received four Tony nominations and closed in 2001, features music by Frank Wildhorn and lyrics by Wildhorn, Leslie Bricusse and Steve Cuden with a book by Bricusse.

"If they leave and haven't bought the soundtrack already, they will," he says of "Jekyll & Hyde: The Musical" theater-goers.

It's clear that "Jekyll and Hyde" has a lot of positive energy surrounding it.

"It's a play that, since it was written, has been talked about, and one that we'll continue to talk about for years to come," Gilkeson says.

"Jekyll & Hyde: The Musical," 7:30 p.m. July 24, 25, 31, Aug. 1; 2 p.m. July 26, Aug. 2, Notre Dame High School, 3417 Church Road, Bethlehem Township. Tickets: 610-252-1067, or at the door.

Shakespeare is for kids

'Midsummer Night's Dream' team performs

By DAWN NIXON
Special to The Press

"Shakespeare for Kids," the sixth annual production designed to introduce children to the plays of William Shakespeare, returns to the Pennsylvania Shakespeare Festival with characters and situations from Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

"Shakespeare for Kids," written by DeSales University alum Erin Sheffield and directed by fellow DeSales alum Matt Pfeiffer, runs July 22 - Aug. 1, Main Stage, Labuda Center for the Performing Arts, DeSales University, Center Valley.

In this year's production, three actors are "Team

Shakespeare." The team receives a "super-secret Shakespeare assignment" to perform one of Shakespeare's plays. Using humor, song and fun-loving mischief, "Team Shakespeare" brings to young minds the timeless magic of the 16th-century English playwright.

"We want children to have their first experience with Shakespeare from the stage," says Sheffield. "These plays were meant to be seen."

Sheffield thinks that the timelessness of Shakespeare is something all audiences can relate to, even children.

"Shakespeare tells us something about ourselves," she says. "The plays are about friendship, jealousy ... It boils down to what makes us human and what it feels like to be alive."

The children who come to see "Shakespeare for Kids" learn about the plot of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" by singing along with the actors. References to fairies, nymphs and the language of Shakespeare are woven throughout the performance.

"Some of Shakespeare's best poetry is from 'A Midsummer Night's Dream,'" Sheffield says.

Set against the backdrop of whatever play is being performed on the Festival Main Stage, "Shakespeare for Kids" employs the imagination of its audience to bring the tale to life.

"I like to think of it like the actors are more like kids themselves," says Sheffield. "This is what it would be like if Shakespeare had his own TV show," she says.

"There's a secret word, a mailbox. It's very interactive. It's totally engaging for all ages."

Have blocked carotid arteries checkup

Q. My doctor put his stethoscope on my neck and muttered to himself, "No brooey." I'm not the type to ask the doctor questions, but I'm still wondering what he meant by that. My spelling is probably wrong.

Your doctor was checking your carotid arteries on the sides of your neck to see if the blood flow to your brain was blocked. If one of the arteries was blocked, it would make a "swoosh" that the medical profession calls a bruit. Your phonetic spelling is excellent. Bruit is pronounced "broo-ee," like "phooey."

Carotid arteries run from the aorta, the main trunk of the arterial system, up to your brain. When these vessels become blocked, you have carotid artery disease, which can cause a stroke.

The chances of developing this disease increase with age. About one percent of those in their 50s have significantly blocked carotid arteries and 10 percent of people in their 80s have carotid artery disease.

As you age, a sticky substance called plaque, which contains cholesterol, can accumulate on the inside walls of your arteries. The process is called atherosclerosis or hardening of the arteries.

Some of the causes of carotid artery disease are high blood pressure, cholesterol in your blood, smoking and diabetes.

It is possible to fight carotid artery disease. First, quit smoking. This is the probably the most significant thing you can do to combat this disease.

In addition to quitting smoking, you should get regular exercise, eat a healthy diet and keep your weight down.

Obviously, if you have high blood pressure, too much cholesterol in your blood or diabetes, you should be treating those.

The common diagnostic tests for carotid artery disease are: carotid duplex scan, an ultrasound study that shows the location and size of the problem; arteriogram, an X-ray, Magnetic Resonance Angiography (MRA), and a computerized tomography (CT Scan) of the brain for damage.

The amount of blockage in a carotid artery determines the risk of having a stroke. If the blockage becomes severe enough, you may need surgery to open the blood flow to your brain.

In carotid endarterectomy, a surgeon makes an incision in the neck to open a carotid artery. The blockage is removed and the artery is closed.

Carotid artery stenting is a procedure in which a wire mesh tube called a stent is positioned and expanded across the blockage in the artery.

In its early stages, carotid artery disease may have no symptoms. The initial indication could be a stroke. However, you may experience warning symptoms of a stroke called Transient Ischemic Attacks (TIAs), which usually last less than an hour.

TIA symptoms include: weakness, numbness, or a tingling on one side of your body; inability to control a limb; loss of vision in one eye, and inability to speak clearly.

If you experience TIA symptoms, contact your physician immediately.

Be careful out there

Remember the TV show "Hill Street Blues"? The captain always ended a squad meeting by reminding his police force to "be careful out there."

That advice still stands for all of us.

As technology gets more advanced and crooks get more cunning, we all have to be more careful.

That was reinforced for me after two incidents with the bank where I have my credit card. During a recent trip to New Jersey, I tried to use my card to buy a pair of shoes.

I thought the clerk erred when she said my card was declined. She tried again and got the same result. I paid cash, thinking there was a problem with the shoe store.

When I tried to take my daughters to lunch, the same thing happened. My card was declined. I was miffed as I called my bank to ask what was going on.

The bank wanted to know if I was in New Jersey using my card. Affirmative. "That's why," the bank rep told me. "You didn't notify us you would be out of state and we thought it was fraud."

I'm happy my bank is that vigilant, even if it did cause a slight problem for me.

This week I got a cell-phone alert from my bank telling me they were blocking my credit card because they found fraudulent activity. There was a number I was told to call as soon as possible.

When I called the number, it played the exact music my bank uses. A robotic voice, exactly like the one I am used to hearing, identified itself as my bank and told me to enter my account number so they could better help me.

I stopped right there. Something didn't seem right. If my own bank doesn't know my account number, how can they say there is fraudulent activity in the account?

No way am I ever going to give any account information in response to email.

I called the fraud detection division of my bank. When I gave him the phone numbers I was instructed to call, he pinpointed what bothered me: It was not my bank's 800 number.

While I waited on the line, he called the number and heard the same message I did. His conclusion: It's the best con job he has heard. Someone recorded my bank's introductory information, then added their own message to obtain the private information they wanted.

"You did the right thing," he said. "Never give account information in response to an email. And please know we never ask people to call a number that is not an 800 number."

They almost had me. I'm telling you all this because chances are you will get a similar email.

My friend Skip sent an email this week telling me not to respond to any email that says the information on my email account needs to be upgraded or I will lose service.

The message he got said the old server was being updated for better service so email accounts had to be updated. He was asked to provide all his account information.

He called his Internet service provider and learned they didn't send the email. It was a scam designed to get your personal account information.

"Who knows what will happen to your information from there," says Skip.

I wouldn't fall for that scam because I've gotten a few of those messages warning me if I don't update my information I will lose my service.

Of course I never do it and nothing happens, except the scammer has to go on to his next victim.

The fraud detection unit of my local police department warns us never to respond to any request for information by clicking on a link. "If you need to contact your bank or service provider, do it by typing in the URL. Don't use any link you received through email," said the fraud detection officer.

We also talked about those telephone calls we all get from so-called local law enforcement officers soliciting funds to help children. Of course, they are all phony.

Be careful about responding to any so-called charity that calls you for donations. I never give to anyone who pays a telemarketer, and I never respond to phone requests.

I talked about that in a column three weeks ago. In response, I received mail from at least a dozen readers saying they were scammed by giving money to a charity they thought was a good cause.

In reality, it SOUNDED like the charity they believed in, but one word in the name was different.

According to readers, those calls come from groups that sound like legitimate cancer organizations, veterans' groups and law enforcement.

I fell for one caller who said he represented disabled veterans. My local vet organization never heard of them.

A great charity rip-off was detailed this week when an investigation revealed the American Association for Cancer Support collected $1.9 million in direct donations from the public. Of that amount, $1.7 million went to telemarketing firms.

If you don't want your money for charity to go to telemarketing firms, think twice before donating to any charity that uses telemarketers.

Again, the best advice is to give to local organizations or to those you truly know.

"Hill Street Blues" is right.

Be careful out there. The sharks are swimming, and we're the bait.

Valley house sales up again, increase 15.6 percent in June

Closed housing sales in the Lehigh Valley were back up in June, increasing again by double digits: 15.6 percent to 779, up from 674 in June 2014.

This continues an upward trend for 2015, according to the Greater Lehigh Valley Realtors (GLVR) monthly report.

Closed sales had been down in May, but were up in April, March, February and January.

The trend for the year is still upward. Closed sales are up 12.7 percent for the year to date to 3,219, compared to 2,856 year-to-date for 2014.

Pending sales increased 35.6 percent in June to 849, up from 626 in June 2014.

Year-to-date pending sales are up 21.3 percent in June to 4,047, up from 3,337 in June 2014.

"The local market statistics halfway through the year are showing a very promising outlook. We expect interest rates to remain low at least through the summer, so it's a great time to invest in real estate in the Greater Lehigh Valley," said GLVR Chief Executive Officer Ryan Conrad.

New listings were down 6 percent in June to 1,218, down from 1,296 in June 2014.

Inventory was down 21.9 percent in June to 3,989, down from 5,106 in June 2014.

The Months Supply

was down 30.9 percent in June to 6.5 percent, down from 9.4 percent in June 2014.

Days on Market was down 3.2 percent in June to 60 days, down from 62 days in June 2014.

The median sales price increased 7.9 percent in June to $199,700, up from $185,000 in June 2014.

The average sales price rose 2.1 percent in June to $224,266, up from $219,639 in June 2014.

The percentage of list price received increased slightly at 0.4 percent in June, to 97 percent, an increase from 96.6 percent in June 2014.

The affordability index decreased by 2.3 percent in June from June 2014.

"We're all feeling positive about the market right now," said Chris Raad, GLVR President. "Metrics like inventory and percent of list price received at sale are two of the better statistics to watch this year."

The Carbon County data for June showed that closed sales are up 38.7 percent, pending sales are up 22 percent, and the median sale price increased 33.3 percent to $114,000, up from $85,500 in June 2014.

Closed sales in May declined 2.8 percent to 596, down from 613 in May 2014.

Closed sales in April had increased for the second straight month by double digits, 10.5 percent to 507 houses, up from 459 houses in April 2014, the GLVR reported.

In March, closed sales increased by 19 percent to 514 houses, up from 432 houses for March 2014.

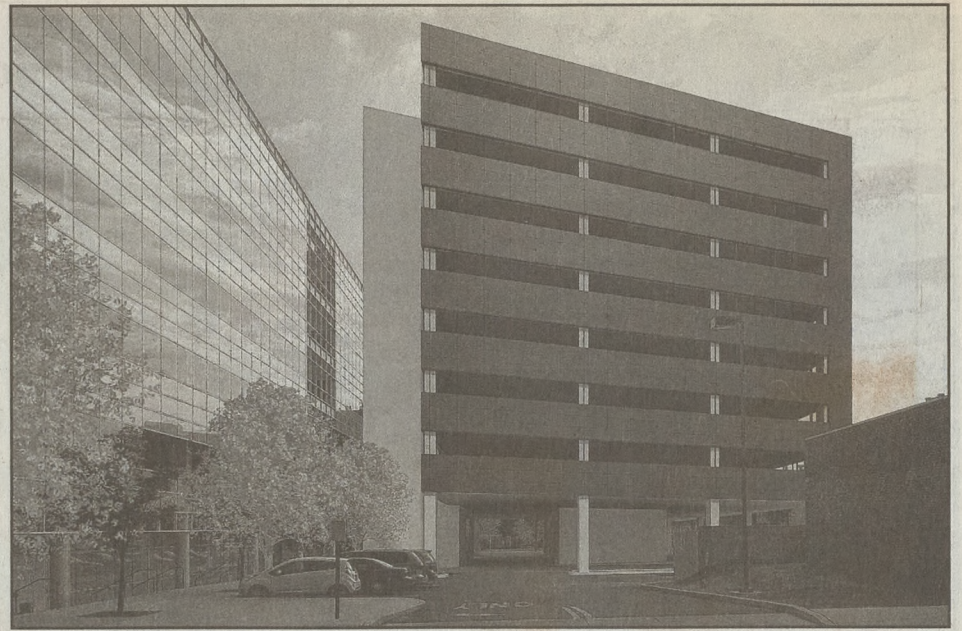

In February, closed sales increased by 4.3 percent to 339 houses, up from 325 houses for February 2014.

In January, closed sales increased 5.7 percent to 373 houses, up from 353 houses sold in January 2014.

The monthly housing data is collected by the GLVR from its Multiple Listing Service, a comprehensive and nonbiased database that includes housing market information from its more than 2,000 Realtor members.

The GLVR is a not-for-profit trade association providing professional development and training resources, competitive market information, legislative advocacy, a peer review and mediation process for members, and a dispute resolution service for consumers.

Groundbreaking for Phase III held at Butz Corporate Center

Alvin H. Butz, Inc. marked the celebration of another redevelopment project in downtown Allentown with a groundbreaking ceremony for Phase III of the Butz Corporate Center at Ninth and Hamilton streets.

The firm has been headquartered in Allentown since 2006 when it moved its offices from South Whitehall Township to the struggling downtown with hopes of encouraging additional developers to do the same.

In 2013, it expanded the original Butz Corporate Center and has leased 95 percent of the building with only 5,000 square feet of retail space available on the first floor.

Phase III includes 60,000 square feet of Class-A office space on seven floors and one level of parking with 43 parking spaces.

United Fiber and Data's Regional Sales Headquarters will move its offices from Butz Corporate Center to Phase III, occupying one floor. The remaining 52,000 square feet of office space is available for lease.

Nancy Unangst with Keller Williams is leasing agent.

"Our firm and the Butz family are overwhelmed with the progress and revitalization taking place in downtown Allentown thanks to the Neighborhood Improvement Zone and investment from other private developers like City Center and The Waterfront," said Greg L. Butz, president and CEO of Alvin H. Butz, Inc., at the July 14 groundbreaking.

"We never dreamed there would be this much progress in Allentown when we moved our headquarters here 10 years ago. It has been an amazing adventure and we're so proud to play a part in its continued growth," Butz said.

The Phase III building, designed by Roberson Butz Architects, features a black facade juxtaposed against the steely glass backdrop of the Butz Corporate Center Phase I and II building. Alvin H. Butz, Inc. is construction manager on the project, expected to be completed in Spring 2016.

"We are pleased to have the commitment of our first tenant, United Fiber and Data, who we formed a partnership with in 2013. UFD, Think Loud Development and the band members of Live share in our passion and philosophy for redevelopment. They are one of the reasons we can move forward with this expansion," Butz said.

The project is expected to bring 175 jobs into center city.

The Butz Family of Companies, Alvin H. Butz, Inc., Shoemaker Construction Co. and Alexander Building Construction Co., provides construction management and design-build services.

The firm has experience in the construction of healthcare facilities, colleges-universities, corporate office buildings, hi-tech manufacturing facilities, sports and entertainment venues, government buildings, K-12 schools and retail buildings in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and northern Delaware.

Magazine lauds Cedar Crest

Cedar Crest College has been ranked 13th among the Top 40 women's colleges in the United States, making it one of only three Pennsylvania schools to be recognized by College Choice Magazine, an independent online publication dedicated to helping students and their families find the right college.

"When students need a breath of fresh air or fancy a brisk walk, they look no further than the campus itself, as Cedar Crest is home to the William F. Curtis Arboretum, a nationally registered arboretum with beautiful flowers and spectacular trees from all over the world," the magazine stated.

"Cedar Crest College in Allentown, Pa. is a mid-size women's college offering a handsome portfolio of undergraduate and graduate degree programs on a dazzling 84-acre campus," the magazine continued. "The school offers majors and minors in over thirty disciplines, among them the highly successful forensic science and nursing programs."

Cedar Crest President Carmen Twillie Ambar said the rankings confirm the college's commitment to its students and community: "We take great pride in providing an intimate, motivated environment where young women and adult students have the opportunity to achieve their educational goals, to truly get to learn from their instructors and to thrive in an atmosphere conducive to imparting the knowledge and skills they need to become leaders in their chosen fields."

Cedar Crest was recognized by U.S. News and World Report in September 2014, where it ranked fifth for value among liberal arts colleges in the northern United States and 16th in the Top Regional Liberal Arts College category in the magazine's annual college report.

LCCC offers culinary classes for downtown Allentown restaurants

Lehigh Carbon Community College's (LCCC) workforce and training department has developed the Professional Attitude and Communication Training (PACT) program along with the City of Allentown and LCTI in response to the needs of managers and owners of emerging restaurants, hotels, supermarkets and retail businesses for professional employees in Allentown's Neighborhood Improvement Zone (NIZ).

The eight-hour pre-employment training class prepares applicants for employment in a highly-competitive, upscale environment. Outward appearance, comportment, communication skills, customer service skills and food safety handling are all addressed within these intense, comprehensive training sessions.

Three sections are being piloted for the summer and fall. Classes will run on a monthly basis in July, August and September at LCCC's Allentown Site, 718 Hamilton St. Daytime and evening classes are available. The City Center Initiative NPP has agreed to subsidize the first three sections of PACT in July, August and September.

Through LCCC's program, participants who have successfully completed the training and apply to Billy's Downtown Diner (Allentown), The Hamilton Kitchen, Shula's and Greenwood Hospitality are guaranteed interviews. These employers have endorsed the training and provided input into course

THEATER REVIEW

'Foreigner' more than 'blasny, blasny'

By PAUL WILLISTEIN
pwillistein@tncollege.com

"Blasny, blasny." That's all you need to know about "The Foreigner," the side-splitting comedy through Aug. 2 (with the same repertory cast for "Henry V," which opened July 18) at the Pennsylvania Shakespeare Festival, Main Stage, Labuda Center for the Performing Arts, DeSales University, Center Valley.

Well, "Blasny, blasny," the phrase repeated by Jacob Dresch (Charlie Baker, "the foreigner" of the show's title), isn't actually all you need to know. For those not familiar with the Larry Shue play, we won't spoil the surprise.

Even for those who've seen the play, the PSF production has all the hallmarks of a definitive interpretation, with a detailed, lived-in looking set design by Bob Phillips, character-driven costumes by Marla Jurglanis, and lighting by Thom Weaver that creates, among other things, realistic vehicle headlights shining through windows.

Director Jim Helsing keeps the action nimble and brisk with the actors talking in naturalistic southern accents (Jane Ridley is dialect coach). Helsing's is a cast of contrasts, which works nicely with the play's amusing dialogue of probity and misappropriation.

We're introduced to Charlie Baker (Dresch evoking a frail, unassuming, emotionally-cauterized twentysomething growing in stature as the play unfolds) when he accompanies Sgt. "Froggy" LeSueur (Carl N. Wallnau) on a much needed vacation to a Georgia fishing lodge run by Betty Meek (Ridley, mining the emotions of an attentive, well-meaning, ever-cheerful widow).

A young couple at the resort, Catherine Simms (Marnie Schulenburg with a fresh earnestness and sparkling demeanor) and the Rev. David Marshall Lee (Zack Robidas as a sincere, bespeckled yet fidgety individual), bring the love. Lee's increasingly odd behavior, especially in the shadow of his sidekick Owen Musser (Anthony Lawton), a county official who's, er, angling to take over the lodge.

Catherine becomes increasingly infatuated with Charlie who is "taught" English by the least likely of teachers, Catherine's younger brother, Ellard (David Button), who's, shall we say, a couple sandwiches short of a picnic.

"The Foreigner" is in the style of a Broadway stage drawing room farce where eccentric characters are tossed together like a salad, a tradition stretching back at least to George S. Kaufman's "You Can't Take It With You" (1936), but with a twist not unlike that of a good Agatha Christie whodunit caper.

The set is expansive and log-hewn, with an attention to detail, including a deer head above a stone fireplace, deer antler chandelier, spoon rack and quilt. It's decorated in early knick-knack. Glimpse the kitchen through a doorway and an entrance hallway beyond the main "great room."

The actors breathe life into the dialogue, which references Shakespeare ("He could turn a phrase."), Southern slang ("hoodoo talk"), pop references ("Klatu! Barada! Nikto!" from the 1951 science fiction film, "The Day The Earth Stood Still") and the contrast between "foreigners," i.e., immigrants, and residents of longer duration. The production crackles with energy, foreshadowing an explosive second act.

Wallnau effects a jaunty stance and an even jaunty British accent.

His performance is nicely offset by the genuine menace created by Lawton in a performance that is riveting and truly chilling.

Dresch projects naive charm. He's a miniaturist of emotions. His interactions with Button and Schulenburg evoke the warm and fuzzy. What began as a nonentity becomes someone you root for. He is also a great physical comedian. His pantomime with Button, also a great comedian, is a show-stopper.

The cast includes William Zielinski, Brian McCann and Wayne S. Turney.

Helsing lets the story unfold naturally, and in an unassuming way, so that by the time of the second-act shocker, you are not ready for it. The contrast is effective, and necessary, as it gives the play its spine, without which it would be a mere trifle.

Fun "The Foreigner" is. Frivolous it is not. This clever, smart, play is as relevant, perhaps more so, than ever.

'Minions' are a real pill

"Minions" is one of the worst animated feature films I've seen in recent memory.

This shouldn't be surprising since "Minions" is the spawn of "Despicable Me" (2010) and "Despicable Me 2" (2013).

The goal of the Minions, after all, is "to serve the most despicable master they can find." Now isn't that a nice anti-social lesson to give the young 'uns?

"Minions," with a screenplay by Brian Lynch (story, "Puss In Boots" 2011), is a grab bag of cinematic rip-offs, right out of the late Roger Ebert's "The Little Book of Hollywood Cliches" (1995), including, to name a few, the vaunted air-shaft escape, a giant Minion (a la The Stay Puft Marshmallow Man, "Ghostbusters," 1984), a cliff hanger (Wile E. Coyote and The Road Runner "Looney Tunes"), and a scene in an underground sewer ("The Third Man," 1949), where the Minions pop up in the middle of London's Abbey Road as the feet and legs of the Lads from Liverpool walk over the manhole cover as a prelude to The Beatles' "Abbey Road" album cover (the scene is accompanied by a harmonica solo from The Beatles' "Love Me Do," 1963).

"Minions" gets by on pop-culture dumpster diving, especially on its soundtrack: a jukebox of snippets of 1960's pop and rock hits (The Turtles' "Happy Together," 1967; The Rolling Stones' "19th Nervous Breakdown," 1966; The Kinks' "You Really Got Me," 1964; The Box Tops' "The Letter" 1967), which have precious little to do with the storyline but which fit in with the '60s-style clothing and distracts the movie-goer from the film's essential lack of strong plot and interesting characterizations. The film concludes predictably with Donovan's "Mellow Yellow" (1966) over the closing credits.

"Minions" is anything but mellow. It is a compendium of fighting, slapping, chases, vehicle crashes, explosions and the kind of mayhem associated with blockbuster action films.

While Sandra Bullock, who voices the lead villain, Scarlet Overkill, provides a great and recognizable voice, the rest of the formidable voice talent (Jon

MOVIE REVIEW

By Paul Willistein

Hamm, Michael Keaton, Steve Coogan, Steve Carell, with Geoffrey Rush as narrator) is relegated to second string behind the nonsensical and sometimes funny babblings of the three featured Minions, Stuart, Kevin and Bob, who resemble nothing more than yellow prescription pharmaceutical pills wearing safety welding goggles and blue jeans.

The Minions are funny in short bursts, as ancillary characters, and not central characters. Since they are onscreen for the bulk of "Minions," and the more clearly definable and much more interesting Scarlet Overkill is not, the film lacks a key identifiable character(s).

Kyle Balda (feature film directorial debut) and Pierre Coffin (director, "Despicable Me," "Despicable Me 2") throw everything but the kitchen sink (that's probably there, too) into "Minions."

Moreover, I object to the use of "That one is Norbert. He's an idiot," which is voiced by one of the characters. The phrase, "You imbecile," is also voiced. If we're going to try to end hurtful language, let's start with persons with disabilities.

(I also objected to the use of the word "moron" by one character toward another character in "Inside Out." The use of the term in a Disney Pixar film is regrettable and offensive. It was also used in "Toy Story 3." Here's a link to a more expert opinion about the use of this word in "Inside Out": downsyndromeprenatal-testing.com/pixars-inside-out-moron-mongo-and-normalizing-disability-bigotry/.

"Minions" utilizes excellent computer generated graphics animation. The character movements are terrific, the detail is amazing and the pacing is good.

Don't take it from me about "Minions." It opened at No. 1 and was the second biggest opening for an animated film to date.

"Despicable Me 3" is set for release in 2017.

APT stages 'Charlotte's Web'

For the third summer in a row, Allentown Public Theatre (APT) presents its production for children and families at St. Luke's Evangelical Lutheran Church, Fellowship Hall, 417 N. Seventh St., Allentown.

"Charlotte's Web" will be staged at 6 p.m. July 24, 31 and 2 p.m. July 25, 26 and Aug. 1 and 2.

"Charlotte's Web," based on the E.B. White novel, was adapted for the stage by Joseph Robinette with White's help. The characters include: Wilbur, an innocent young pig who wishes only to make friends; Fern, a girl who knows what she wants and fights for it; Templeton, the gluttonous rat who can occasionally be talked into a good deed; the Zuckermans and the Arables, who learn a thing or two about the value of life, and Charlotte, who is determined to save Wilbur with the magic of her web.

Teague Fernandez, who last year played Mowgli in APT's "The Jungle Book," directs "Charlotte's Web." The cast, some of whom play multiple roles, includes Marian Barshinger (Charlotte), Emily Peiffer (Wilbur), Cheryl Moritz (Fern), Justin Ariola (Templeton), Bill Joachim (Uncle Homer, Sheep) and Thomas Rush (Fair Official, Uncle, Gander).

Fernandez notes that "Charlotte's Web" is about "using our imagination," so he wants to get the audience to use theirs. One way he's doing that is by letting the action spill off the stage and around and into the audience. "At one point, Lurvy [a farmhand] chases Wilbur into the woods, and the audience is asked to imagine they are the trees," he says.

"The fair scene will really be interactive," he adds, "as the play's setting will surround the audience. For the county fair set, we plan to rent some fair games for people to play during the scene change, and we'll have a working popcorn machine and hot dogs. So, people will really feel the fun and excitement of the fair."

The play runs about one hour. The show is free for children age 12 and under, and pay-what-you-will for adults and teens. Off-street and on-street parking is available at the church.

Performances are sponsored by the Center City Initiative (funded by Air Products, Butz Corp., City Center Investment Corp., National Penn, PPL, Susquehanna Bank and Wells Fargo), the County of Lehigh, Just Born, Inc., St. Luke's Lutheran Church, Target, and the Trexler Trust.

VBS teaches patience

Shepherd of the Hills Vacation Bible School attendees learn about patience during a game of Glacier, during which they struggled to unfold a frozen T-shirt and realized that the task became easier as the shirt thawed. Pictured is the team that won the challenge. All seem happy with the victory, except for Tori Tulley (center), who was chosen to wear the extremely cold shirt. With her are Maya Becks, Hayley Fenstermaker, Hunter Weiss, Andrew Baer and Paige Tacker.

Emily Easton, Steve Hansen and Brianna Baer show some of the items collected for the Whitehall Food Pantry during VBS, held the week of July 5 at the Egypt church. By the end of the session, nearly 250 items had been donated.
