GlassWorks at the Banana Factory is a dynamic, hands-on educational facility dedicated to promoting an understanding and appreciation of glass art and the glass making process.

Led by Creative Director James Harmon, a glass artist and instructor with more than 35 years of experience, the studio presents glassblowing and frameworking classes and workshops, educational programs for at-risk youth and a visiting artist in residence program.

GlassWorks offers private lessons and rentals for professional and amateur artists interested in exploring this exciting medium. The studio is adaptable for a variety of uses, programs and classes. It features a state-of-the-art, 350 lb. free-standing pot furnace, three benches and gloryholes of various sizes. There is also an eight-station frameworking area and future plans call for adding both cold and warm glass studios.

The Studio Manager of GlassWorks is John Choi, who has more than 10 years of experience in glass art and sculpting and has exhibited in galleries nationwide.
