

Rowe Jr., Russell

Navy Feeds Men
Well, Writes Rowe ^{OCT} 4 1943

The U. S. Navy feeds its gobs well, Russell Rowe Jr., of 640½ Ontario Street, this city, says in a letter to his granddad, Charles Renz, janitor at City Hall. Rowe, a seaman second class, is stationed somewhere in Brazil.

In his letter he complains of a stomach ailment, but admits that he "can't resist the temptation to overeat" because the food is so good. He says there's plenty of it, too. Rowe finds the country beautiful and the work interesting.

He hopes to run across Norman Koch, a fellow Bethlehemite. Koch entered the Navy not so long ago and was a chum of Rowe's. Mr. Renz lives at 630 Broadway.
