

Domenig, Jack W.

Ex-Bethlehem Dent Repairer Now Denting Axis War Planes

AN EIGHTH AAF BOMBER COMMAND STATION, England.—Sgt. Jack W. Domenig, 3407 Thirty-second Street, Astoria, Long Island, New York, formerly of Bethlehem, used to repair the dents other people put into auto bodies and fenders. Now he's on the other end.

Domenig, as an auto body worker, in civilian life, smoothed out wrinkled fenders, etc. Now behind the waist gun of an Eighth AAF Flying Fortress, his duty and pleasure is to put as many dents as possible in any hostile bodies which come within range—nice, new Focke Wulfs, streamlined Messerschmitts or bulbous-nosed Ju. 88's. Not that Domenig confines himself exclusively to bodies. He'll take a wing, if he can get one, or a gas tank, or an engine.

But every time he sees an enemy fighter go down the thought comes to him that someone is going to have an awful time pounding out

those dents. JAN 10 1944
Sgt. Domenig is the son of Mrs. Elizabeth Domenig, of Astoria. He is 31, and was employed by the Blay Auto Body Shop, of 725 North Bergen Street, Bethlehem, Pa. He is unmarried.
