

Winkler, Louis H.

Red Cross Doing Superior Work Among Yank Troops In England Says Captain Louis H. Winkler

It's not alone the enlisted man, "doughboy", and his sister-in-arms, the WAC, nor the sailor lad and WAVE, nor the Marine and his feminine counter-part, nor yet the Coast Guard and the Spar who benefit by the activities of the Red Cross; the officers, too, of all these organizations are provided for very adequately.

Attesting to this are these excerpts from letters written by Captain Louis H. Winkler, Army Medical Corps, to his wife.

January 13, Captain Winkler wrote from England, "The Red Cross maintains officers' clubs. They are in old houses adapted to the use of visiting officers. They serve very good meals for two shillings (40 cents) and maintain a free snack bar 24 hours a day. The Red Cross is wonderful and should have the support of everyone!"

On the 28th, Captain Winkler told his wife that, "The Red Cross is doing a superior job. It is as near wife, mother, friends and home as anything could be. They have separate clubs for officers, men, nurses and WAC and it would be next to impossible for us to come to London if it were not for them. We'd have to walk the streets and sleep there, too, if it weren't for them."

Captain Winkler is a Bethlehem

DR. LOUIS H. WINKLER

... now Army Medical Corps captain, tells of Red Cross work in Britain.

man, graduate of Lehigh University, of Bucknell University and Jefferson Medical College and was medical resident at St. Luke's Hospital at the time he enlisted.

March 3, 1944