The great spirit of volunteerism in Bethlehem has made this city the dynamic, enriching place it is today. But volunteerism has the potential for individual reward as well.

Barbara Fraust, who has volunteered for several organizations, says the work helps her as a real estate agent.

Helene Whitaker says volunteering gave her the skills that made her a dean at Northampton Community College.

We're taking names

This week's cover story deals with a wonderful paradox: the selfishness of volunteerism. The extent to which people here contribute their time and talent is probably Bethlehem's single greatest attribute.

Gerald Scharf is editor of The Bethlehem Star

From the United Way to picking up trash at Musikfest to planting and maintaining public flower gardens, this is a city with a deep tradition of doing, not for money or glory, but to express pride and to fulfill a spirited sense of civic duty.

The idea for our story came from Barbara Fraust, a woman with whom I fell deeply in love recently when she helped me buy one house and sell another in the span of about a week. In the housing market that existed then, her feat was one that made sales commissions look like puny remuneration.

Barbara called recently, and in the course of our conversation she reflected on how the pool of volunteer labor in the valley seems to be drying up.

Two-wage-earner households and the increasing demands of our jobs are squeezing the amount of time we have to volunteer.

Then she commented on the sword's other edge. Volunteerism can be as enriching for the volunteer as it is for the community, she said.

And a story was born.

Barbara Fraust said two-wage-earner households and the increasing demands of our jobs are squeezing the amount of time we have to volunteer. Then she commented on the sword's other edge. Volunteerism can be as enriching for the volunteer as it is for the community, she said. And a story was born.

I think it's an important story. But it does have something of a downside.

The problem, of course, is that there is great potential here to slight magnificent volunteer efforts by not mentioning them in the story.

How, many will ask, can we write about volunteering in Bethlehem without mentioning names like the Sun Inn's Susan Barr or Sally Gillispie or Cidney and Robert Spillman or Bert Daday or Walt Williams or Fred Bees or Otto Ehram Jr. or Joan Paul or Gertrude Fox or John Howell or Pat Kesling or Jan Bonge or Dennis Scholl or Jack and Betsy Jordan or Ralph Schwartz?

And isn't it an omission beyond all bearing to broach the subject without mentioning Myra Saturen or Robert Donchez or Rita Plotnicki or Eleanor Boylston or Bill and Jan Marsh or Esther Lee or Alfred Krug or Walt and Nancy Cramer or Tracy Ruch or Marta Robledo or Walt and Joan Dealtry or Jose Rosado or Jane Florenz or Elaine Schadler?

These are all hall of famers in the city's volunteer ranks, and for each of their names there are a dozen more I've forgotten.

As I read back through that list, I see that the mother of writer Janet Worsley, Shirley Worsley, a key part in the city's First Night events, is missing.

It's hopeless, you see? I hope readers will do me a great favor and identify those I've forgotten, call them, recognize their work, and point out what a nitwit I am for having forgotten them.

Now is time to discover home

This is the time of year when thoughts turn to home. If we are lucky, memories of places where we evolved into our present state will always remain sweet and slightly wistful. The secret nooks and crannies of our youth are recalled with a little more clarity as the holidays approach. No matter how far we travel from it, the first place we called home usually brings the warmest feelings.

Myself, I never left home. Well, I did move into a different house, and there were some really great vacations, but basically I just stayed put. The little borough that watched me grow as a child now watches as I stumble through middle age. The same streets that I walked my dolls and dogs on were there for me to walk my babies and new dogs on. (Although these new dogs will not tolerate being dressed in baby bonnets and pushed in a stroller.) Even the telephone poles held up. When I took my first ride on a two-wheeler down our hill I forgot how to brake and the pole was there to catch me. (Ouch!) Years later my son went flying down a similar hill and a pole was conveniently there for him.

Some things changed in my little world. The playground where every kid spent the summer is not the safe little haven it used to be. True, it still stands and does a wonderful job all season, it just isn't taken for granted anymore that if your children are there, they are fine. But that's not the park's fault, that's just the '90's.

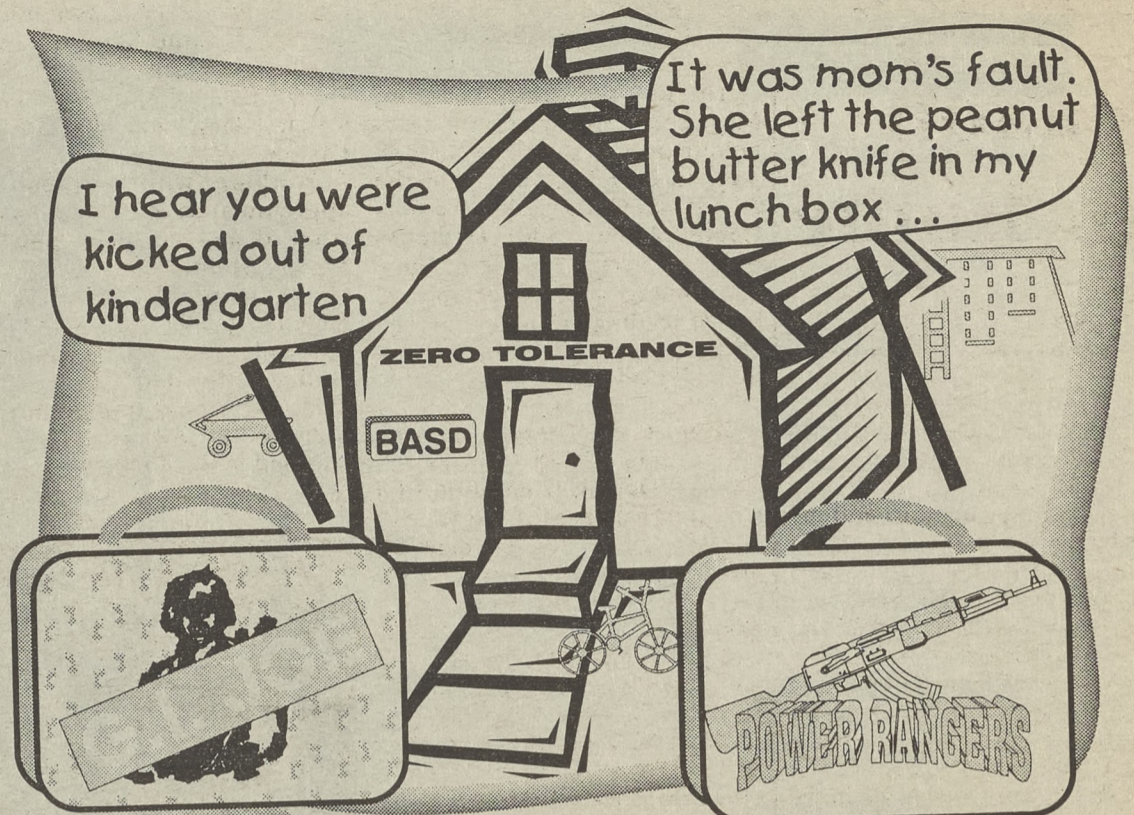

A. Davenport Jordan, a lifelong resident of Fountain Hill, is the editor-in-chief of Conrail's financial newsletter

There are no assumptions when it comes to a child's safety. There are more homes here now, although growth has not been a trade off for charm. Borough hall has moved into jazzier digs, and when change is needed we answer the call.

Many things have remained the same. We still have three churches, three schools and lots of heart. We come out parading on Halloween and Memorial Day and the swimming pool still remains one of the best in the area. We gather together to sing and light our borough Christmas tree and when one of us needs help, our neighbors become friends and provide it. If Norman Rockwell came back scouting for something to paint, you would almost have to point him in our direction.

All of my childhood friends left. I am the only one who stayed behind. When they come home they visit me and tell me how different everything looks. But what do they know? They aren't here long enough to see. I used to wonder why I stayed. But for better or worse, instinct has always charted my course and the instinct to remain always won out. Now I'm

Christmas lights honor 2 traditions

To the editor:

I read with interest Dr. Stephen Antalics' article on the divisive aspects of Bethlehem's Christmas tree lighting, which you carried in your Nov. 17 edition.

If memory serves, when I first came to Bethlehem the lights on the South Side were also white. At an early meeting of the South Bethlehem Historical Society, one of our members, Mr. Willie Howard, proposed that we ask for colored lights once again. Willie and several of the others present appeared to believe that the white lights were an attempt to impose Moravian practices on the whole city. As a relative newcomer, I was surprised at the vehemence of the feeling; but I am sure it reflected a deep, longstanding sense of being downtrodden and despised, surely unjustifiable treatment given the caliber of the South Side's fine people.

I was again surprised when we actually got the colored lights back; it seems the city had them in storage.

Since then, over the years, I have heard rumors that the colored lights have been spoken of disparagingly, in terms such as those described by Mr. Antalics — "purity" versus "paganism," and so on.

Nevertheless, I do not believe the answer to the problem lies in imposing a single kind of lighting on the whole city. Shall the Moravians be deprived of their tradition? Certainly not, especially in the 18th century core of the city which they founded. Yet, shall the peoples whose labors raised Bethlehem from a village to a place of true world historic significance be denied the respect due to their holiday traditions? Once again, certainly not.

The answer is to keep and honor both. This can be achieved by the practice of civility and tolerance — two virtues that sometimes seem lost forever.

Here, as in many other things, education is the key. Schools can, and must, teach the history of the entire city, and the contributions of all its many groups. Adults should, if possible, go to the library and read something of the city's past — and not just the parts they favor, either, but especially the parts they fear, resent or don't understand. Going against the grain in this way often results in new insights and sympathy.

Since we have chosen to make Christmas in Bethlehem an industry, then we also owe it to our guests to see to it that they achieve a proper understanding and sympathy for the historic life of the city. If it does nothing else, the Tourism Authority should impress upon every guide this simple formula: White stands for the Moravian tradition; the colored lights in other parts of town stand for Bethlehem's rich ethnic diversity.

Nothing more. Nothing less. It is a small step toward mutual respect; and mutual respect is, in turn, a small step toward genuine peace on earth. We can take that step, right here — and most appropriately — in Bethlehem.

Sincerely,
Joan Campion
Bethlehem

Grandson hasn't forgotten the putz

To the editor:

"I can't go to the Boyd with you to see that James Bond movie. My other grandmother says I have to go to the Butz."

"The name is Putz, not Butz," I told my 10-year-old-grandson.

The next day he called me.

"That Butz-Putz was better than a James Bond movie. Very exciting! And holy, too, the voice said. There were all these little scenes — I counted 17 — and they're lit up, one at a time, the lights go on and off — I was on the edge of my seat — what's coming next? What came was these little wooden figures. They're the wise men dressed in pretty outfits that are called robes — there's real moss for grass and real trees and angels are floating over all this — you're not supposed to see the wires — and His parents, Mary and Joseph, are hiding the Christ baby in some hay before that bad king who was murdering baby boys can get him. All the time — a whole half-hour soft music and voice telling the story."

Long, long ago. The 10-year-old is now a successful lawyer in Los Angeles. But he has not forgotten. And the Putz is still there. Very soon he expects to fly his wife and children for their first Christmas in Bethlehem, the fair city of lights, and their first time with the miracle of the Putz.

'Tis the season for home

glad. It is a good feeling knowing that my children and I will always share the same setting for our childhood memories. My grand plan has always been to end my days by the sea, but then the scent of autumn fills the air and as I walk in the woods the same trees shed their leaves on me again, and I know that I could never miss October here. Then winter starts. I don't really appreciate nasty winters, but after a snowstorm the nights just twinkle with stars and ice and everyone comes out in the street, and no, I couldn't leave in January. Spring arrives next, and everything that could possibly bloom does and, well, you just have to see it and no, I wouldn't want to be away for that. So, I guess I will have to compromise and get a little cottage by the sea for the summer and close it up when September rolls around. Why do I stay? How could I leave?

There's an old song that tells us there is no place like home for the holidays. If you can't get back this year, take your mind on a journey down the paths of your childhood, and when you return, make new memories in the place where you are now. If you are going home, try to view it through starry, sentimental eyes. After all, isn't that how we would all like to be seen?

Nick Yutko

BY CHRISTOPHER JUDD

Nick Yutko, 33, is one of three partners in Dreamscape, a comic book shop at 310 W. Broad St. His partners are Jim Jurgensen and Solvey Balent, whose husband, Jim Balent, is the artist behind the Cat Woman comic book. Batman comic book writer Doug Moench will be at Dreamscape to sign some of his works on Dec. 17.

Why are they called 'comics' when they're hardly humorous?

It came from the history of the comic strip, the panel strips. In the beginning they were humorous.

As a Schuylkill County native, what led you to open a comic book shop in Bethlehem.

I've been collecting comics since I was a kid. I went to college for computer science and started looking for a place to open a shop. I was just kind of looking for a town that didn't have a comic book shop. Allentown had Beachhead and Easton had Mr.

Monster. We also have a store in Easton.

What happened to your South Side Bethlehem location?

It never went over at all. It was a waste of time, really.

Who buys comic books?

The vast majority are males, first of all. The ages are 15 to 30. The average age is 21 these days. That's what Time magazine said.

Are most of the kids fans or collectors?

They're fans, but it doesn't take long to get snagged. There are two hooks, actually. It should be to enjoy reading them. Unfortunately, people get caught up in making money. They find out, that's usually not the case.

What's the hottest seller?

Spawn. It's actually done by a bunch of kids - 20-year olds - who left DC Comics and started their own.

What's it about?

I couldn't tell you, honestly. I haven't had time to read any.

Superman actually was killed off a couple of years ago, but I hear he's feeling better. True?

Yeah, he's been back for awhile. Death served him well.

How's good ol' Wonder Woman doing?

No sales. It's really bad.

Will she be dissected by a giant ray gun, only to bounce back like the others?

No, that's been bled to death. Whose going to buy into that again?

What's the strangest comic book you've sold?

One time Marvel put out a generic comic. It had a white cover with a bar code on it. People would buy it, too, because it's just so wacky.

What do you want for Christmas?

A new car would be nice. A brand new car.

Do you think the election sweep by the GOP, with its pro-business platform, will boost the comic book industry?

It's six of one and half-dozen of the other, I say. It doesn't matter.

If you could, what comic book would you write?

Captain America. I like that one a lot.

How about Reportar, the news reporter who can twist any quote out of context, deflect criticism with his First Amendment shield, and regularly battles the slime-spewing Editor?

Well, you'd know a little more about that one, wouldn't you?

Histories and legends

in days gone by

BY CHARLES G. HAFNER

Bethlehem's other big game

Last week's column recalled the classic Allentown High-Bethlehem High football game, Thanksgiving Day, 1942, that ended in a 7-7 tie, the last high school game for members of the Class of 1943, including Chuck Bednarik.

Charles G. Hafner is a retired social studies teacher who lives in Bethlehem

The Saturday before, Nov. 21, Lehigh had played Lafayette in another dramatic and memorable classic of that historic series. Lehigh, with one of its best teams in years, had lost only to Yale and Penn State. Lehigh lost to the Nittany Lions 19-3 in Taylor Stadium. It was the final football game between the two schools.

On that Saturday afternoon in 1942, a crowd of 15,000 packed Fisher Field to watch an underdog Lafayette team turn the tables and dominate the game, accumulating 237 yards to Lehigh's 86 and 15 first downs to Lehigh's 6. One of the stars for the Leopards was Todd Saylor of Bethlehem, who played center.

Lehigh's score came in the third period on a pass from half-back Herb Shoener to his twin brother Hal. Both teams scored on fourth down plays. This game also ended in a 7-7 tie with Lafayette on the Engineers' 1 yard line, the first tie in the series in 53 years.

An ardent fan who attended that game, and most other Lehigh-Lafayette games from the first game in 1884 until his death, was Harry Ruthhart, better known to Lehigh fans and South Side shoppers then as "Peanut Man." He was an ever-present figure at Lehigh football games peddling peanuts. As long as he could he walked the aisles taking coins passed along to him by fans and then tossing a bag of peanuts to the buyer. Later he sold from a cart from whence the rich aroma of roasted peanuts emanated, tempting customers at Lehigh games and also in front of the bank at Third and Adams streets.

The Bethlehem Globe-Times of Nov. 25, 1946, the year I graduated from Lehigh, carried an account of Mr. Ruthhart's recollections of the first Lehigh-Lafayette game in 1884. He was 13 at the time. At a Lehigh-Lafayette dinner honoring Lafayette's undefeated and untied 1921 team, Harry Ruthhart recalled games in the famed and historic series, naming players on virtually every Lehigh team.

In that fall of 1884, he was among the crowd of 300 that stood behind the rope marking off the playing field, watching 22 young men wallow in a sea of mud. The day before he had seen the Lehigh players' jackets hanging clean and white in Geisenderfer's shop. It was then he learned of the game to be played by the young men of Lehigh against a team from Lafayette the next day. In retrospect he considered it unfortunate the field was littered with cans and rocks. The visitors won 50-0.

He recalled, "The first teams I saw wore little skull caps, and they wouldn't shave or get a haircut before the game. ... There were no helmets then, and linemen used to wear shin guards." Injuries were so common that President Theodore Roosevelt, a robust competitor, urged consideration of outlawing the game.

Of the Davis brothers, Richard Harding (the renowned journalist) and Charles, who played in that first Lehigh-Lafayette game, Mr. Ruthhart said, "I remember where they lived at Devers' Drugstore." Mr.

ter reinforced with Navy and Marine trainees. Again Lehigh faced another Nittany Lion powerhouse at Taylor Stadium.

No star ever shone more brightly in the firmament over the playing fields of Lehigh University than the pitching performance of Sanford "Lefty" Wilson that spring day in May 50 years ago, as he shut out Penn State. Lehigh went on to beat Penn State 2-0. Frank Majczan of Bethlehem had two hits to lead the Engineers' attack.

Sitting in the stands that afternoon was Mace Brown, scout and former pitcher for the Boston Red Sox. Shortly thereafter Lefty signed a contract with the Boston Red Sox.

(My thanks to Bob Belmonte, friend and former Lehigh teammate, for the Globe-Times article on Mr. Ruthhart.)

Harry Ruthhart recalled, "The first teams I saw wore little skull caps, and they wouldn't shave or get a haircut before the game. ... There were no helmets then, and linemen used to wear shin guards." Injuries were so common that President Theodore Roosevelt, a robust competitor, urged consideration of outlawing the game.

Ruthhart related that he had attended one of Richard's plays at the local opera house (probably the Fountain Hill Opera House, later the Globe Theater located at Fourth and Wyandotte streets and now a parking lot) with one of the leading actors of the day in a lead role.

Although Lehigh lost to Penn State by a respectable 19-3 score in their last football game, the competition continued in some other sports, notably wrestling. In May 1944, Penn State's baseball team came to Taylor Stadium on East Packer Avenue. Lehigh, with a team drawn from a civilian student body of only a few hundred students, took the field against a heavily favored Penn State nine with a ros-

getting my wish

BY ARLENE KOCH

Taking shelter for the winter

One day last week following the first truly cold night we had this year, when my morning cup of black coffee finally kicked in and my eyes focused, I looked out at the pond and saw that it was shiny from an ice crust on top. A momentary twinge of panic caused me to quickly look at the waterfall, fearing that the hose carrying the water to it may have frozen too, but such wasn't the case.

A few weeks ago I wrote that I was tired of the extended warm weather that we'd been having and was looking forward to dropping temperatures. Well, the temperatures certainly have dropped, and already I'm eating my words. Someone far wiser than I once said that you should be careful what you wish for because you might get it.

A short and very brisk walk through our field this morning revealed little patches of light snow remaining in sheltered spots from the flurries we had last night. A momentary stop to watch a squirrel pick up a walnut and disappear behind the tree made me think about other spots that would offer shelter to wild creatures.

Humans have built buildings and devised means of heating them as protection from the elements, but animals don't have these options. And although I know that a lot of animals have instincts or built-in features that enable them to protect themselves from the cold, I still wonder how some animals and birds manage to survive.

Shortly before dusk last night I had decided it was time to cover the ground in the shrubby area behind the pond with straw. I'm hoping that the added warmth will keep the water flowing through the buried hose for awhile yet. And as the wind gusted up to 20 mph around my head and I removed some large leaves from the creek bed with frozen fingers, I silently cursed myself for waiting until the last minute to do this.

Arlene Koch
is past

Valley
Audubon Society

However, it was only because I was outside freezing at just that particular time that I saw something happen in my yard that I had never seen before — a little thing, really, but something that made me forget about my cold hands.

A downy woodpecker alighted on the trunk of a tree when it was almost too dark to see. It paused there for only a few seconds and then flew straight down and into a bluebird house that we have mounted on a post about 5 feet off the ground. The event only took about 10 seconds, but I stood there motionless for another five minutes or so, waiting to see if the bird would come back out. It didn't.

The woodpecker was using that box as a place to roost for the night, a place that afforded it both warmth and shelter. I have often stood quietly near some of our evergreen trees at dusk and watched as different sparrows, house finches, juncos and cardinals flew in and disappeared for the night, but I had never before actually seen a bird take shelter in one of the boxes in my yard.

I know it's hard for most people to understand, but I found this whole incident really gratifying. Perhaps it's because I knew I had just seen something that happens all the time but which few people ever get to see, or perhaps my protective instincts were just coming out. Regardless of the reason, it made me feel good.

During our last brutal winter many animals and birds died, even ones that were adapted well to the cold. However, from everything I've read since then, game officials feel there wasn't enough of a kill-off to cause any long-lasting problems. If left alone, nature in its own way usually heals itself.

But something that happened last winter during one of the too-many-to-count snowstorms came to my mind when I saw that woodpecker take shelter in the man-made box. The memory was probably close at hand because I had also thought about it last week when that black cat named "Turkey" was howling at me from the cellar window well.

Sometime in February the snow was piled so deep that it seemed impossible for even the most maneuverable of animals to navigate through it. A stray cat that has long since disappeared had taken to using the aforementioned window well for shelter. I had gotten used to seeing this cat there, but one day something about its curled-up sleeping position looked different.

Closer inspection showed that there was an opossum sleeping half alongside and half under the cat. I watched as it opened its eyes for a brief moment, shifted position a little, and went back to sleep.

This symbiotic relationship went on for more than a week, prompting David to nickname the two animals "Possumpuss." I don't know whatever became of either of them, but I do know that the quest for survival, even more than politics, can make strange bedfellows.

Court jester leads Hawks

BY TOM HARPER

Which is worse, being an opponent on one of Christy Cochran's powerful kills, or a friend on the wrong end of a practical joke?

Even her coach, Bethlehem Catholic girls' volleyball Coach Jody Davis, would resort to flipping a coin. "We do everything to her," Christy said, in slightly embarrassed but devilishly sinister tone. "I feel so bad for her."

Not remorseful enough, though, to share one delicious recollection of her prized antics.

"When we were about 12 or 13 (the we being teammates Tiffany Bedics and Carrie Walker), we were in the USVBA (the U.S. Volleyball Association). We would run to the different referees at all the tournaments and say, 'See our coach? She's pretty cute, huh?' We used to set her up with all these referees. And one time at a sleep-over tournament we told this referee — we had no idea who he was — and we told him where Jody was staying. He showed up with dinner at her door. She was so mad at us."

Such is the life Christy leads. Her athletic career has been blessed with unparalleled success in not one but two sports (volleyball and basketball). Her next four years have been mapped out, now that she'll be attending Penn State on a full athletic scholarship for volleyball. Academically, she's in the top 10 percent of her senior class.

Joe Gill

On top of all that, she's enjoyed the jet set, one time staying at the home of future Hall of Fame pitcher Nolan Ryan while a member of the Houston Juniors, a traveling team. "His daughter was on my team. He was a nice guy, really down to earth. Everywhere he went he would sign autographs. I said to him, 'You're pretty popular, aren't you?'"

Not fun, not worth it

Could life be any more fun for her?

"I try to be a very disciplined person, but I never lose sight of the fun. I know I'm known for joking around a lot on my team. I was always told when something's not fun anymore, then it's not worth it. I love to win, but I never let that overrule my teammates."

As the senior captain of the Golden Hawks' volleyball squad, she helped to lead her team to a 25-2 record during a season in which the squad didn't lose a single game — that's right, not a game — in a match until pool play in the District XI tournament.

Becahi advanced to the state playoffs, which proved to be an unfunny joke in its own right. The team wound up playing for eight hours straight without a single break and eventually lost in the semifinals.

"I got yelled at for going to the bathroom between breaks," Christy said of the drawn-out tournament. "(The officials) said, 'You missed the coin toss,' and I said, 'Can't we have just two minutes? One?'"

Although she said winning the state title was her ultimate goal, her yearlong obsession was fulfilled when the Golden Hawks captured the district championship over Allen. Becahi was twice the bridesmaid in the district tournament the past two seasons, and Christy said she was determined to end the streak this season.

The cause of her anxiety began in her sophomore year. The team was considered a likely bet to repeat as district champs, having won the season before. But Liberty stunned the Hawks in the title game, a game Christy has not forgotten.

"Sophomore year we had everyone back from the previous year. It was a huge upset. It just devastated me. I never wanted to feel that pain again. That was probably the worst loss ever for me."

That bitter taste carried through to this season, when fate finally proved kind once again. "We knew this season we were going to be the dominant team. I knew what it's like (to win districts) in basketball. We won three golds in a row. I said to myself, 'Now we have to do it in both sports this year.'"

They did. "This year was definitely the best year because we had such a close team and we were so motivated. We played with such heart the entire season, especially towards the end. Everyone played phenomenally with the saves, the hustling. It was such a team effort."

Wants to hit

1994 has been very kind to Christy. Not only had she won two district gold medals, she received a full athletic scholarship to Happy Valley, an appropriate setting for such a happy person.

Events and Standings

She committed to attend Penn State by after attending a volleyball camp there over the summer. She said she will likely red-shirt her freshman year so that she can develop her talents on the collegiate level and step into the starting rotation the following season when an outside hitter position will be open. That is the position she wants to play.

"I get a great satisfaction from hitting. I love it. It's a great stress reliever. When it's crunch time, I'm the kind of player who says, 'Set me again! Set me again! Keep setting me!'"

This insatiable hitter has played primarily as a middle blocker, a position in high school that is often reserved for the tallest person on the court. She doesn't have awe-inspiring height (5 feet 10½ inches), but her 33-inch vertical leap quickly turns heads upward when she plays. Her regimen of weightlifting and cliometrics, which uses a variety of jumping exercises, is the reason for her fantastic leaping skills.

Her physical skills are a result not so much of talent, but of work ethic. "To get to the next level you have to be hard-working," Christy said. "I learned that probably around my freshman year. We went to Nationals, and I watched the girls play. I thought to myself, 'I want to get to the next level. I want to earn a scholarship to a

Stepping out of the shadow

She has accomplished everything she has wanted to do, even if she has seemingly lived her life under someone's shadow. She said she used to be known as "Tom's sister," referring to her brother, a former football standout at Becahi who is now the placekicker for Duke University.

Now, the big joke is that she is "Dan Kendra's girlfriend." The two have dated for a year and a half; there's even a little subplot. Christy's best friend is Tiffany Bedics, the star basketball player who is dating Brian Baker, the prolific running back for Becahi who's great friends with Dan. Talk about an incredible sports foursome.

Christy said she still maintains her individuality in her relationship with Dan, though others may refer to her as Dan's significant other. "He is a good influence. We really have a lot in common. I knew most of the physical (aspect of sports) — with all of my training — but I've learned a lot about the mental aspect of sports through him because of all the pressure that's been put on him. He's just an incredibly focused person. I respect and admire him."

Respect and admiration have also rightfully been bestowed upon Christy for what she has accomplished. And should her career blossom as her potential indicates, one day people just might refer to Dan as "Christy Cochran's boyfriend." Truly then would she have the last laugh.

The best thing is, she's never stopped laughing.

Joe Gill

Christy is heading to Penn State on a full athletic scholarship, and is angling for the outside hitter spot.

CAROLING GROUPS

NORTHEAST MIDDLE SCHOOL BRASS ENSEMBLE AND CHORUS

Once again we welcome this fine group of student musicians to our festival! These sixth, seventh, and eighth grade students are sure to delight festival goers with their own unique renditions of holiday favorites. The Chorus is led today by Eric Yurkanin and the Brass Ensemble is under the direction of Brian Rupnik.

MASTER'S MIMICS YOUTH PUPPET TEAM

This creative group of teenagers from Lehigh Valley Grace Brethren Church will light up our stage with Christmas songs and skits performed by professionally-made puppets. This ministry team, under the direction of Joyce Humberd and Dana Reiter, has spread its message through performances at a number of Lehigh Valley fairs, nursing homes, and schools over the past year. For more information, call the Lehigh Valley Grace Brethren Church office at 868-0004.

BETHLEHEM BRASS ENSEMBLE

Part of the American Legion Band, the Bethlehem Brass Ensemble has been playing together for more than a decade. These dedicated musicians have become a festival favorite over the years and our event wouldn't be complete without their wonderful holiday sound. The men and women who comprise the Brass Ensemble are once again under the direction of Ray Huston. For more information, contact Ray Huston at 866-4518.

BETHLEHEM LIONESSE CLUB

Dedicated to serving the community, this tireless group of women work vigorously year 'round to make Bethlehem a better place to live! Working hard to raise money through raffles, trips, and various sales, the Lionesses funnel their funds back into the community to benefit a number of local charities. Proud of these women, the Caroling Festival eagerly welcomes back these energetic crowd pleasers. For more information, call Nancy Beahn at 759-6600.

CAROLING GROUPS

OPENING SING-A-LONG

Also joining the chorus will be City Hall employees and their families. Festival goers will delight in this unique chorus!

FIRST NIGHT VOLUNTEERS

This dedicated group of volunteers for Bethlehem's premiere New Year's Eve celebration is making its first appearance on our stage this year. ## DAVE FRY'S CHILDREN'S SING-A-LONG

Join in the merriment as popular children's performer Dave Fry entertains youngsters and adult, alike, with his own unique blend of classic and "not so classic" Christmas songs. # Volunteers both give and receive

BY JANET WORSLEY

Volunteering is, by definition, the act of helping others freely, without compensation. It is ironic then that through volunteering, so many people help themselves — to new friendships, new careers, and new ways of life.

Barbara Fraust, for example, met her husband through volunteering. She was involved in a Boy Scout Explorer program, he was one of her volunteers, and the rest is history.

But volunteering is more than a matchmaker to Ms. Fraust, a Bethlehem Realtor who has made giving her time for others a way of life.

"To me, you get to do anything you want, develop anything you want and screw it up and not get fired for it," she said, "And, it's a hell of a lot of fun."

Ms. Fraust has volunteered for many groups, including United Way, Turning Point, Boy Scouts of the Lehigh Valley, Community Services for Children, the YWCA, and Mayfair.

She was also, for a short time, a candy striper. "I passed out the first time I saw someone bleeding," she said. "I hit my head and I had to get stitches."

The experience taught her that, career-wise, she should stay out of the medical field. "I got to find out as much about what I didn't want to do as what I did want to do," she said.

Learning new skills

She did discover volunteering was an opportunity for her to try new things and learn new skills. Through one fund-raiser, she even got a chance to launch a hot air balloon.

Opportunities for volunteerism include much more than stuffing envelopes or answering phones. Some programs involve tasks such as gardening, working with kids, or even dealing with animals.

In one case, Ms. Fraust said,

"Anyone who doesn't think volunteering can help in your business is going about it in the wrong way."

Barbara Fraust

Boy Scouts were taught how to tag wild bears as part of a volunteer program with the National Park Service.

"I love the adventure," she said.

Her role as a volunteer also helps her out in her professional life as a real estate agent, giving her a network of resources and services to work with. "When I have a customer who has a certain need, I can pick up the phone and call whoever I need," she said. "It's like having a personal yellow pages."

"Anyone who doesn't think volunteering can help in your business is going about it in the wrong way," she said.

Ms. Fraust said she also got to know some of her best friends through volunteering. "You get to be with people who are excited about something," she said.

And if it doesn't work out, or becomes too routine, there's plenty of room to move on. "There's always the door open," she said.

The United Way Volunteer Center is one such gateway. "We are a clearing house for volunteers," said Nona Gregory, who directs the center with Priscilla Schueck.

The center works to match potential volunteers to positions in more than 500 organizations across the Lehigh Valley through questionnaires and interviews.

Opportunities include working with Turning Point of the Lehigh Valley, educating kids through Junior Achievement, helping out at an area humane society or historical group, or planning for festivals, such as Musikfest.

Ms. Gregory said that volunteering for many people is a healthy, positive experience that in many cases can lead to a permanent position.

"We would see people sitting at home, worrying about their lack of employment," she said. "The volunteering got them out of bed in the morning. It would give them a purpose."

The secret to success, Ms. Gregory said, is making sure you've got the right people in the right positions. "The match has to be right. You have to get the right combination of skills and interests."

And without those skills and interests, Bethlehem would be a very different place without the efforts of local volunteers, Mayor Kenneth Smith said.

"Without volunteers we wouldn't have most of the events we take for granted," he said, citing such annual staples as Musikfest, Celtic Classic and the Bethlehem Children's Festival in the Rose Garden.

Often unnoticed

Mr. Smith also pointed out that the city's historical groups, responsible for the look and feel of Downtown Bethlehem, consist mainly of volunteers. In addition, volunteers help the city in ways that usually go unnoticed, such as cleaning up local parks or highways.

Their efforts, Mr. Smith said, beautify the city and lessen the burden on municipal workers. "They're allowing us to spend our time in other areas," he said.

Mr. Smith once volunteered as the president of Historic Bethlehem Inc. and the American Cancer Society, and still devotes time to Lehigh University scholarship drives. "I do what I can, and I certainly encourage others to do it in whatever area they have an interest in."

"It's a wonderful way to immerse yourself in the community," he said, "and from my experience, there are many rewards besides those to the community.

The volunteers get a big lift out of it themselves."

Phyllis Fisher, of Bethlehem, got her start volunteering, and the skills she learned led her to her current position as director of marketing at Nazareth's Moravian Hall Square retirement community.

"I've had an odd career," she said, "It was because of volunteer work that I got a lot of training."

She said that many women in her generation — she's 61 — were active in the community. "We didn't go out and have careers, we volunteered and had children," she said.

Mrs. Fisher volunteered for the Junior League of Bethlehem, a group which provides educational programs to benefit children before taking a job as director of tour guides for the Historic Bethlehem Foundation.

From there, she went on to be part of a group which founded the United Way Volunteer Center — the same one now run by Ms. Gregory — in 1983, before starting up at Moravian Hall Square.

"I just have been very fortunate to hop into these things," said Mrs. Fisher. "It really did start with volunteering."

Helene Whitaker, dean of planning and human resources at Northampton Community College, also believes volunteering gave her the skills she uses for her current job.

For example, while working in public relations at Bethlehem Steel, Ms. Whitaker volunteered for the Northampton County Development Corps, a group which worked to bring new businesses to the area through a long term plan.

The strategic planning skills, as well as the practical knowledge she gained, were perfect for her current job of setting the agenda for the development of NCC.

"It has just been ideal as to what I do in my work life," she said.

Expand horizons

Ms. Whitaker said she began volunteering as a "kind of a '60s protester," and used the experience to expand her horizons when she started in the work world.

"I had an interest in meeting new people," she said, "I knew I had a lot to learn, but I thought I could offer some things. I wanted a life that was broader than just work."

Today, Ms. Whitaker can easily see the changes in the community that she helped to bring about. Junior high schools were changed to middle schools, in part due to a recommendation from a Bethlehem Area School District advisory committee she chaired.

She also helped get Musikfest rolling as one of the members of the original steering committee for the festival.

To see an idea on paper turn into such a successful project, she said, is "absolutely incredible."

"Even after all these years, I'm there every single day," she said, "You really feel like you've birthed something."

AROUND THE CITY

W. Bethlehem sinkholes

A water main break mixed with West Bethlehem's ample limestone reserve to create five sinkholes on the 1500 block of Bonnie Drive.

Jim Bruno, his wife and three children evacuated their home at 1530 Bonnie Drive after the incident Monday morning. The Brunos' 50-foot Douglas fir was sucked into the ground. A hole also undermined property at 1524 Bonnie Drive.

Count and recount

Bethlehem Democrat Paul McHale continued to pick up votes in his congressional race recount, while city Republican Joe Uliana was finally recognized as the victor by his state Senate race opponent.

Mr. McHale's margin of victory over Republican challenger Jim Yeager in the 15th Congressional District contest had been 373 votes out of 143,577 cast, but was increased to 473 after an error was discovered in the 13th Ward, 18th District, in Bethlehem.

In the 18th State Senate District,

Democrat Bob Freeman said he won't challenge the results of his 141-vote loss to Republican Joe Uliana, even though Freeman says he could make a case to disqualify many Republican absentee votes.

On your 'Markt

The crafts, entertainment and food were plentiful in the first week of Christkindmarkt, even if the crowds weren't.

Attendance at the first three days of the German Yuletide market was off by 25 percent from last year.

The gathering of handmade crafts, European and Pennsylvania Dutch foods, music and children's shows will run through Dec. 11 in heated tents under the Hill-to-Hill Bridge.

Top Cop I

State Police Capt. Robert Werts, commander of Bethlehem's Troop M, was named the 1994 John Schafer Award winner for excellence in law enforcement.

Werts, a Hamilton Township, Monroe County, resident, joined the state police in 1968 and was named commander in 1987.

Top Cop II

Bethlehem Police Sgt. Henry

Jonkman received the 1994 Lehigh County Police Chiefs Police Officer of the Year Award.

The father of three was a founding member of the department's community policing program. Mr. Jonkman joined the department in 1973, and in September was promoted to sergeant

IN THE SCHOOLS

Zero tolerance

The Bethlehem Area School District finalized its zero-tolerance policy on weapons in schools at a board meeting last Monday.

The policy calls for a mandatory 10-day suspension and expulsion hearing for any student found with a gun or explosive. For other weapons, students in grades 3 through 12 would receive a three-day suspension. For children in grades 2 and lower, the penalty would be a minimum one-day suspension.

The board once again resisted a motion by board member Barbara Huth that would have included an escape clause in the policy. The clause would have allowed the superintendent to postpone the mandatory punishment in exceptional cases.

Junior Miss runner-up

Krista Roche, a 17-year-old Liberty High School senior, was named runner-up Saturday night in the Pennsylvania Junior Miss Pageant in West Reading. Roche was awarded a $2,400 scholarship after winning the fitness, presence and composure exhibition. She is a student of Miss Jeanne's School of Dance Arts in Bethlehem.

Superintendent raise

Thomas Doluisio, superintendent of the Bethlehem Area School District, was given a $3,000 raise by the school board, following a recent evaluation of his performance.

School Board President Lynn Glancy said Mr. Doluisio's performance, as judged by the school board, was well above the quality expected. The raise brings his salary to $102,205.

Four-year-old Anthony Quinones of Bethlehem cheers in the arms of Mayor Ken Smith after flipping the switch that turned on the city's Christmas lights at a ceremony Sunday night.
